

H I S T O R Y of the R E I G N of the EMPEROR CHARLES V.

THE

VOL. IV.

THE # HISTORY

OF THE # REIGN

OF THE

EMPEROR CHARLES V.

By WILLIAM ROBERTSON, D.D.

PRINCIPAL of the University of EDINBURGH, and HISTO-RIOGRAPHER to his MAJESTY for Scotland.

A NEW EDITION.

VOL. IV.

LONDON:

Printed for W. STRAHAN; T. CADELL, in the Strand; and J. BALFOUR, at Edinburgh. MDCCLXXVII.

THE # HISTORY

OF THE # REIGN

OF THE

EMPEROR CHARLES V.

BOOK X.

HILE Charles laboured, with fuch unwearied industry, to overcome the obstinacy of the Protestants, the effects of his steadines in the execution of his plan were rendered less confiderable by his rupture with the Pope, which daily increased. The firm resolution which the Emperor seemed to have taken against restoring Placentia, together with his repeated encroachments on the ecclefiastical jurisdiction, not only by the regulations contained in the Interim, but by his attempt to re-assemble a council at Trent, exasperated Vol. IV. B Paul

BOOK X.

I 549. The Pope's fchemes against the Emperor.

Воок X. 1549.

Paul to the utmost, who, with the weakness incident to old age, grew more attached to his family, and more jealous of his authority, as he advanced in years. Pushed on by these pasfions, he made new efforts to draw the French King into an alliance against the Emperor *: But finding that Monarch, notwithstanding his hereditary enmity to Charles, and dread of his growing power, as unwilling as formerly to involve himself in immediate hostilities, he was obliged to contract his views, and to think of preventing future encroachments, fince it was not in his power to inflict vengeance on account of those which were past. For this purpose, he determined to recall his grant of Parma and Placentia, and after declaring them to be reannexed to the Holy See, to indemnify his grandfon Octavio by a new eftablishment in the ecclefiastical state. By this expedient, he hoped to gain two points of no fmall confequence. He, first of all, rendered his possession of Parma more fecure; as the Emperor would be cautious of invading the patrimony of the church, though he might feize without fcruple a town belonging to the house of Farnese. In the next place, he would acquire a better chance of recovering Placentia, as his folicitations to that effect might decently be urged with greater importunity, and would infallibly be attended with <sup>a</sup> Mem. de Ribier, ii. 230.

more

more weight, when he was confidered not BOOK X. as pleading the caufe of his own family, but as an advocate for the interest of the church. But while Paul was priding himfelf in this device, as a happy refinement in policy, Octavio, an ambitious and high-fpirited young man, who could not bear with patience to be spoiled of one half of his territories by the rapaciousness of his father-in-law, and to be deprived of the other by the artifices of his grandfather, took measures in order to prevent the execution of a plan fatal to his intereft. He fet out fecretly from Rome, and having first endeavoured to furprize Parma, which attempt was fruftrated by the fidelity of the governor to whom the Pope had entrusted the defence of the town, he made overtures to the Emperor, of renouncing all connexion with the Pope, and of depending entirely on him for his future fortune. This unexpected defection of one of the Pope's own family to an enemy whom he hated, irritated, almost to madness, a mind peevish with old age; and there was no degree of feverity to which Paul might not have proceeded against a grandfon whom he reproached as an unnatural apostate. But happily for Octavio, death prevented his carrying into execution the harfh refolutions which he had taken with refpect to him, and put an end to his pontificate in the B 2 fixteenth 1549.

Воок X. 1549.

fixteenth year of his administration, and the eighty-fecond of his age *.

As

* Among many inflances of the credulity or weakness of historians in attributing the death of illustrious perfonages to extraordinary caufes, this is one. Almost all the hillorians of the fixteenth century affirm, that the death of Faul III, was occasioned by the violent passions which the behaviour of his grandfon excited; that being informed, while he was refreshing himself in one of his gardens near Rome, of Octavio's attempt on Parma, as well as of his negociations with the Emperor by means of Gonzaga, he fainted away, continued fome hours in a fwoon, then became feverish, and died within three days. This is the account given of it by Thuanus, lib. vi. 211. Adriani Istor. di suoi tempi, 1ib. vii. 480. and by Father Paul, 280. Even cardinal Pallavicini, better informed than any writer with regard to the events which happened in the papal court, and when not warped by prejudice or fystem, more accurate in relating them, agrees with their narrative in its chief circumstances. Pallav. b. ii. 74. Paruta, who wrote his hiftory by command of the fenate of Venice, relates it in Hiftorici Venez. vol. iv. 212. the same manner. But there was no occasion to fearch for any extraordinary cause to account for the death of an old man of eighty-two. There remains an authentick account of this event, in which we find none of those marvellous circumstances of which the hiftorians are fo fond. The cardinal of Ferrara. who was entrulled with the affairs of France at the court of Rome, and M. D'Urfé, Henry's ambaffador in ordinary there, wrote an account to that Monarch of the affair of Parma, and of the Pope's death. By these it appears, that Octavio's attempt to furprize Parma, was made on the twentieth of October; that next day in the evening, and not while he was airing himfelf in the gardens of Monte-Cavallo, the Pope received intelligence of what he had done; that

As this event had been long expected, there Book X. was an extraordinary concourfe of Cardinals at Rome; and the various competitors having had time to form their parties, and to concert their measures, their ambition and intrigues protracted the conclave to a great length. The Imperial and French factions strove, with emu-that he was feized with fuch a transport of passion, and cried fo bitterly, that his voice was heard in feveral apartments of the palace ; that next day, however, he was fo well as to give an audience to the cardinal of Ferrara, and to go through business of different kinds; that Ostavio wrote a letter to the Pope, not to cardinal Farnese his brother, intimating his refolution of throwing himfelf into the arms of the Emperor; that the Pope received this on the twentyfirst without any new fymptoms of emotion, and returned an answer to it; that on the twenty fecond of Ollober, the day on which the cardinal of Ferrara's letter is dated, the Pope was in his usual state of health. Mem, de Ribier, ii. 247. By a letter of M. D'Urfé, Nov. 5. it appears that the Pope was in fuch good health, that on the third of that month he had celebrated the anniversary of his coronation with the usual folemnities. Ibidem, 251. By another letter from the fame perfon, we learn, that on the fixth of November a catatrh or defluxion fell down on the Pope's lungs, with fuch dangerous fymptoms, that his life was immediately defpaired of, Ibid. 252. And by a third letter, we are informed, that he died November the tenth. In none of these letters is his death imputed to any extraordinary caufe. It appears, that more than twenty days elapsed between Octavio's attempt on Parma, and the death of his grandfather, and that the difease was the natural effect of old age, not one of those occasioned by violence of paffion.

1550.

5

B 3

lation,

Feb 7th. The election of Julius III.

duct.

lation, to promote one of their own number, and had, by turns, the prospect of fuccess. But as Paul during a long Pontificate had raifed many to the purple, and those chiefly perfons of eminent abilities, as well as zealoufly devoted to his family, Cardinal Farnele had the command of a powerful and united fquadron, by whole address and firmnels he exalted to the papal throne the Cardinal di Monte, whom Paul had employed as his principal legate in the council of Trent, and trufted with his most fecret intentions. He affumed the name of Julius III. and, in order to express his gratitude towards his benefactor, the first act of his administration was to put Octavio Farnese in posfeffion of Parma. When he was told of the injury which he did to the Holy See by alienating a territory of fuch value, he brifkly replied, " That he would rather be a poor Pope, with the reputation of a gentleman, than a rich one, with the infamy of having forgotten the obligations conferred upon him, and the promifes which he had made b." But all the luftre of this candour or generofity he quickly effaced by an action moft fhockingly indecent. According His character and conto an ancient and established practice, every Pope upon his election claims the privilege of beftowing, on whom he pleafes, the Cardinal's b Mem. de Ribier.

hat,

BOOK X.

1550.

1550.

hat, which falls to be disposed of by his being Boox X. invefted with the triple crown. Julius, to the aftonishment of the facred college, conferred this mark of diffinction, together with ample ecclefiaftical revenues, and the right of bearing his name and arms, upon one Innocent, a youth of fixteen, born of obscure parents, and known by the name of the Ape, from his having been trufted with the care of an animal of that fpecies, in the Cardinal di Monte's family: Such a proftitution of the higheft dignity in the church would have given offence, even in those dark periods, when the credulous fuperfition of the people emboldened ecclefiafticks to venture on the most flagrant violations of decorum. But in an enlightened age, when, by the progrefs of knowledge and philosophy, the obligations of duty and decency were better underftood, when a blind veneration for the Pontifical character was every where abated, and one half of Chriftendom in open rebellion against the Papal See, this action was viewed with horror. Rome was immediately filled with libels and pafquinades, which imputed the Pope's extravagant regard for fuch an unworthy object to the most criminal passions. The Protestants exclaimed against the abfurdity of fuppoling that the infallible fpirit of divine truth could dwell in a breaft fo impure, and called more B 4 loudly loudly than ever, and with greater appearance of juffice, for the immediate and thorough reformation of a church, the Head of which was a difgrace to the Christian name . The reft of the Pope's conduct was of a piece with this first specimen of his dispositions. Having now reached the fummit of ecclefiaftical ambition, he feemed eager to indemnify himfelf, by an unrestrained indulgence of his defires, for the felf-denial or diffimulation which he had thought it prudent to practife while in a fubordinate station. He became careless, to so great a degree, of all ferious bufinefs, that he could feldom be brought to attend to it, but in cafes of extreme neceffity; and giving up himfelf to amusements and diffipation of every kind, he imitated the luxurious elegance of Leo, rather than the fevere virtue of Adrian, the latter of which it was neceffary to difplay, in contending with a fect which derived great credit from the rigid and auftere manners of its teachers d.

Воок Х.

$550.

His views and proceedings with refpect to the general council. THE Pope, however ready to fulfil his engagements to the family of Farnefe, difcovered no inclination to obferve the oath, which each cardinal had taken when he entered the conclave, that if the choice fhould fall on him, he would

<sup>c</sup> Sieid. 492. F. Paul, 281. Pallav. ii. 76. Thuan. lib. vi. 215. <sup>d</sup> F. Paul, ibid.

3

would immediately call the council to re-affume its deliberations. Julius knew, by experience, how difficult it was to confine fuch a body of men within the narrow limits which it was the interest of the church of Rome to prefcribe; and how eafily the zeal of fome members, the rashness of others, or the suggestions of the Princes on whom they depended, might precipitate a popular and ungovernable affembly into forbidden inquiries, as well as dangerous decifions. He wished, for these reasons, to have eluded the obligation of his oath, and gave an ambiguous answer to the first proposals which were made to him by the Emperor, with regard to that matter. But Charles, either from his natural obfinacy in adhering to the measures which he had once adopted, or from the mere pride of accomplishing what was held to be almost impossible, persisted obstinately in his refolution of forcing the Protestants to return into the bosom of the church. Having perfuaded himfelf, that the authoritative decifions of the council might be employed with efficacy in combating their prejudices, he, in confequence of that perfualion, continued to folicit earneftly that a new bull of convocation might be iffued; and the Pope could not, with decency, reject that requeft. When Julius found that he could not prevent the calling of a council, he endeayoured

Воок X. 1550.

BOOK X. 1750.

voured to take all the merit of having procured the meeting of an affembly, which was the object of fuch general defire and expectation. A congregation of Cardinals, to whom he referred the confideration of what was necessary for restoring peace to the church, recommended, by his direction, the fpeedy convocation of a council, as the most effectual expedient for that purpose; and as the new herefies raged with the greatest violence in Germany, they proposed Trent as the place of its meeting, that, by a near infpection of the evil, the remedy might be applied with greater difcernment and certainty of fuccefs. The Pope warmly approved of this advice, which he himfelf had dictated, and fent nuncios to the Imperial and French courts, in order to make known his intentions °.

A diet at Augfburg to enforce the Interim.

June 25.

ABOUT this time, the Emperor had fummoned a new diet to meet at Augfburg, in order to enforce the obfervation of the Interim, and to procure a more authentick act of the Empire, acknowledging the jurifdiction of the council, as well as an explicit promife of conforming to its decrees. He appeared there in perfon, together with his fon the Prince of Spain. Few of the Electors were prefent, but all fent deputies in their name. Charles, notwithftanding the def-

· F. Paul, 281. Pallav. ii. 77.

potick

potick authority with which he had given law in BOOK X. the Empire during two years, knew that the fpirit of independence among the Germans wasnot entirely fubdued, and for that reafon took care to over-awe the diet by a confiderable body of Spanish troops which efcorted him thither. The first point, submitted to the confideration of the diet, was the neceffity of holding a council. All the Popifh members agreed, without difficulty, that the meeting of that affembly should be renewed at Trent, and promised an implicit acquiescence in its decrees. The Protestants, intimidated and difunited, must have followed their example, and the refolution of the diet would have proved unanimous, if Maurice of Saxony had not begun at this time to difclofe new intentions, and to act a part very different from that which he had fo long affumed.

By an artful diffimulation of his own fentiments; by addrefs in paying court to the Emperor; and by the feeming zeal with which he forwarded all his ambitious fchemes, Maurice had raifed himfelf to the Electoral dignity; and having added the dominions of the elder branch of the Saxon family to his own, he was become the most powerful Prince in Germany. But his long and intimate union with the Emperor, had afforded him many opportunities of obferving narrowly the dangerous tendency of his fchemes.

Maurice begins to form defigns against the Emperor.

1550.

Воок Х.

1550.

fchemes. He faw the yoke that was preparing for his country; and from the rapid as well as formidable progress of the Imperial power, was convinced that but a few fteps more remained to be taken, in order to render Charles as abfolute a Monarch in Germany as he had become in Spain. The more eminent the condition was to which he himfelf had been exalted, the more folicitous did he naturally become to maintain all its rights and privileges, and the more did he dread the thoughts of defcending from the rank of a Prince almost independent, to that of a vaffal subject to the will of a master. At the fame time, he perceived that Charles was bent on exacting a rigid conformity to the doctrines and rites of the Romifh church, inflead of allowing liberty of confcience, the promife of which had allured feveral Protestant Princes to affift him in the war against the confederates of Smalkalde. As he himfelf, notwithftanding all the compliances which he had made from motives of interest, or an excels of confidence in the Emperor, was fincerely attached to the Lutheran tenets, he determined not to be a tame spectator of the overthrow of a fystem which he believed to be founded in truth.

The political motives which influenced him, THIS refolution, flowing from the love of liberty, or zeal for religion, was ftrengthened by political and interefted confiderations. In that that elevated station, in which Maurice was now placed, new and more extensive prospects opened to his view. His rank and power entitled him to be the head of the Protestants in the Empire. His predecessor, the degraded Elector, with inferior abilities, and territories lefs confiderable, had acquired fuch an afcendant over the councils of the party; and Maurice neither wanted discernment to see the advantage of this preeminence, nor ambition to aim at attaining it. But he found himfelf in a fituation which rendered the attempt no lefs difficult, than the object of it was important. On the one hand, the connexion which he had formed with the Emperor was fo intimate, that he could fcarcely hope to take any ftep which tended to diffolve it, without alarming his jealoufy, and drawing on himfelf the whole weight of that power, which had crushed the greatest confederacy ever formed in Germany. On the other hand, the calamities which he had brought on the Protestant party were fo recent, as well as great, that it feemed almost impossible to regain their confidence, or to rally and re-animate a body of men, after himself had been the chief instrument in breaking their union and vigour. Thefe confiderations were fufficient to have difcouraged any perfon of a spirit less adventurous than Maurice's. But to him the grandeur and vaftnefs of the enterprize were allurements; and he boldly refolved

13

Βοοκ Χ.

14 Воок X.

1550.

refolved on meafures, the idea of which a genius of an inferior order could not have conceived, or would have trembled at the thoughts of the danger that attended the execution of them.

The paffions which cooperated with thefe,

His paffions concurred with his intereft in confirming this refolution; and the refentment excited by an injury, which he fenfibly felt, added new force to the motives for opposing the Emperor, which found policy fuggefted. Maurice, by his authority, had prevailed on the Landgrave of Heffe to put his perfon in the Emperor's power, and had obtained a promife from the Imperial ministers that he should not be detained a prifoner. This had been violated inthe manner already related. The unhappy Landgrave exclaimed as loudly againft his fon-in-law as against Charles. The Princes of Heffe required Maurice inceffantly to fulfil his engagements to their father, who had loft his liberty by trufting to him; and all Germany fuspected him of having betrayed, to an implacable enemy, the friend whom he was most bound to protect. Roufed by these folicitations or reproaches, as well as prompted by duty and affection to his father-in-law, Maurice had employed not only entreaties but remonstrances in order to procure his releafe. All these Charles had difregarded; and the fhame of having been first deceived, and then flighted, by a Prince whom he had ferved 2 ferved with zeal as well as fuccefs, which merited a very different return, made fuch a deep impreffion on Maurice, that he waited with impatience for an opportunity of being revenged.

THE utmost caution as well as delicacy were requifite in taking every ftep towards this end; as he had to guard, on the one hand, against giving a premature alarm to the Emperor; while, on the other, fomething confiderable and explicit was neceffary to be done, in order to regain the confidence of the Protestant party. Maurice had accordingly applied all his powers of addrefs and diffimulation to attain both thefe points. As he knew Charles to be inflexible with regard to the fubmiffion which he required to the Interim, he did not hefitate one moment whether he should establish that form of doctrine and worfhip in his dominions: But being fenfible how odious it was to his fubjects, inftead of violently imposing it on them by the mere terror of authority, as had been done in other parts of Germany, he endeavoured to render their obedience a voluntary deed of their own. For this purpofe, he had affembled the clergy of his country at Leipfick, and had laid the Interim before them, together with the reafons which made it neceffary to conform to it. He had

The caution and addrefs with which he carries on his fchemes.

He enforces the Interim in Saxony,

15

BOOK X.

1550.

BOOK X.

had gained fome of them by promifes, others he had wrought upon by threats, and all were intimidated by the rigour with which obedience to the Interim was extorted in the neighbouring provinces. Even Melancthon, whose merit of every kind entitled him to the first place among the Protestant divines, being now deprived of the manly counfels of Luther, which were wont to infpire him with fortitude, and to preferve him fleady amidft the florms and dangers that threatened the church, was feduced into unwarrantable conceffions, by the timidity of his temper, his fond defire of peace, and his exceffive complaisance towards perfons of high rank. By his arguments and authority, no lefs than by Maurice's arts, the affembly was prevailed on to declare, that, in points which were purely indifferent, obedience was due to the commands of a lawful fuperior. Founding upon this maxim, no lefs uncontrovertible in theory, than dangerous when carried into practice, especially in religious matters, they proceeded to class, among the number of things indifferent, feveral doctrines, which Luther had pointed out as grofs and pernicious errors in the Romifh creed; and placing in the fame rank many of those rites which diffinguished the Reformed from the Popish worship, they exhorted their people to comply comply with the Emperor's injunctions con-BOOK X. cerning these particulars f.

By this dextrous conduct, the introduction of the Interim excited none of those violent convultions in Saxony, which it occafioned in religion. other provinces. But though the Saxons fubmitted, the more zealous Lutherans exclaimed against Melancthon and his affociates, as false brethren, who were either fo wicked as to apoftatize from the truth altogether; or fo artful as to betray it by fubtle diffinctions; or fo feeble-spirited as to give it up from pusillanimity and criminal complaifance to a prince, capable of facrificing to his political intereft that which he himfelf regarded as most facred. Maurice, being confcious what a colour of probability his past conduct gave to those accusations, as well as afraid of lofing entirely the confidence of the Protestants, iffued a declaration containing professions of his zealous attachment to the Reformed religion, and of his refolution to guard against all the errors or encroachments of the Papal see g.

HAVING gone fo far in order to remove the fears and jealousies of the Protestants, he found

At the fame time courts the Emperor.

f Sleid. 481. 485. Jo. Laur. Moshemii Institutionum Hift. Ecclesiafticæ, lib. iv. Helmft. 1755, 4to. p. 748. Jo. And. Schmidii Historia Interimistica, p. 70, &c. Helmst. 8 Sleid. 485. 1730. Vol. IV.

1550. Makes pro-

Proteflant

feffions of zeal for the 17 iε

Воок Х.

18

it neceffary to efface the impreffion which fuch a declaration might make on the Emperor. For that purpose, he not only renewed his profeffions of an inviolable adherence to his alliance with him, but as the city of Magdeburg ftill perfifted in rejecting the Interim, he undertook to reduce it to obedience, and infantly fet about levying troops to be employed in that fervice. This damped all the hopes which the Protestants begun to conceive of Maurice, in confequence of his declaration, and left them more than ever at a lofs to guefs at his real intentions. Their former fuspicion and diffrust of him revived, and the divines of Magdeburg filled Germany with writings in which they reprefented him as the most formidable enemy of the Protestant religion, who treacherously affumed an appearance of zeal for its interest, that he might more effectually execute his fchemes for its destruction.

Protefts against the mode of proceeding in the council. THIS charge, fupported by the evidence of recent facts, as well as by his prefent dubious conduct, gained fuch univerfal credit, that Maurice was obliged to take a vigorous ftep in his own vindication. As foon as the re-affembling of the council at Trent was propofed in the diet, his ambaffadors protefted that their mafter would not acknowledge its authority, unlefs unlefs all the points which had been already BOOK X. decided there were reviewed, and confidered as entire; unless the Protestant divines had a full hearing granted them, and were allowed a decifive voice in the council; and unlefs the Pope renounced his pretenfions to prefide in the council, engaged to fubmit to its decrees, and abfolved the bishops from their oath of obedience, that they might deliver their fentiments with greater freedom. These demands, which were higher than any that the Reformers had ventured to make, even when the zeal of their party was warmeft, or their affairs most profperous, counterbalanced, in fome degree, the impreffion which Maurice's preparations against Magdeburg had made upon the minds of the Proteflants, and kept them in fuspence with regard to his defigns. At the fame time, he had addrefs enough to reprefent this part of his conduct in fuch a light to the Emperor, that it gave him no offence, and occafioned no interruption of the ftrict confidence which fubfifted between them. What the pretexts were which he employed in order to give fuch a bold declaration an innocent appearance, the contemporary hiftorians have not explained; that they imposed upon Charles is certain, for he still continued not only to profecute his plan as well concerning the Interim as the council, with the C. 2. fame fame ardour, but to place the fame confidence in Maurice, with regard to the execution of both.

1550.

Воок Х.

20

The diet refolve to make war on the city of Magdeburg.

THE Pope's refolution concerning the council not being yet known at Augsburg, the chief business of the diet was to enforce the observation of the Interim. As the fenate of Magdeburg, notwithstanding various endeavours to frighten or to footh them into compliance, not only perfevered obstinately in their opposition to the Interim, but began to ftrengthen the fortifications of their city, and to levy troops in their own defence, Charles required the diet to affift him in quelling this audacious rebellion against a decree of the Empire. Had the members of the diet been left to act agreeably to their own inclination, this demand would have been rejected without hesitation. All the Germans who favoured, in any degree, the new opinions in religion, and many who were influenced by no other confideration than jealouly of the Emperor's growing power, regarded this effort of the citizens of Magdeburg, as a noble ftand for the liberties of their country. Even fuch as had not refolution to exert the fame spirit, admired the gallantry of their enterprize, and wished it fuccess. But the prefence of the Spanish troops, together with the dread of the Emperor's displeasure, over-awed the members members of the diet to fuch a degree, that BOOK X. without venturing to utter their own fentiments, they tamely ratified, by their votes, whatever the Emperor was pleafed to prefcribe. The rigorous decrees, which Charles had iffued by his own authority against the Magdeburgers, were confirmed : a refolution was taken to raife troops in order to beliege the city in form; and perfons were named to fix the contingent in men or money to be furnished by each state. At the fame time, the diet petitioned that Appoint Maurice Maurice might be entrusted with the command general. of that army, to which Charles gave his confent with great alacrity, and with high encomiums upon the wifdom of the choice which they had made h. As Maurice conducted all his fchemes with profound and impenetrable fecrecy, it is probable that he took no flep avowedly in order to obtain this charge. The recommendation of his countrymen was either purely accidental, or flowed from the opinion generally entertained of his great abilities; and neither the diet had any forefight, nor the Emperor any dread of the confequences which followed upon this nomination. Maurice accepted without hefitation the truft committed to him, instantly difcerning the important advantages which he might derive from it.

> h Sleid. 503. 512. C 3

MEAN-

1550.

1550. The council fummoned to re-affemble at Trent. December.

Воок Х.

MEANWHILE, Julius, in preparing the bull for the convocation of the council, observed all those tedious forms which the court of Rome can employ, with wonderful dexterity, to retard any difagreeable measure. At last it was publifhed, and the council fummoned to meet at Trent on the first day of the enfuing month of May. As he knew that many of the Germans rejected or disputed the authority and jurisdiction which the Papal fee claims with refpect to general councils, he took care, in the preamble of the bull, to affert, in the ftrongest terms, his own right, not only to call and prefide in that affembly, but to direct its proceedings; nor would he foften thefe expressions, in any depree, in compliance with the repeated folicitations of the Emperor, who forefaw what offence they would give, and what conftruction might be put on them. They were cenfured, accord. ingly with great feverity, by feveral members of the diet; but whatever difguft or fuspicion they excited, fuch abfolute direction of all their deliberations had the Emperor acquired, that he procured a recefs in which the authority of the council was recognifed, and declared to be the proper remedy for the evils which at that time afflicted the church; all the Princes and states of the Empire, fuch as had made innovations in religion, as well as those who adhered (a) to the fystem of their forefathers, were required to fend their reprefentatives to the council; the Emperor engaged to grant a fafe-conduct to fuch as demanded it, and to fecure them an impartial hearing in the council; he promifed to fix his refidence in fome city of the Empire, in the neighbourhood of Trent, that he might protect the members of the council by his prefence, and take care that, by conducting their deliberations agreeably to fcripture and the doctrine of the fathers, they might bring them to a defirable iffue. In this recess, the observation of the Interim was more strictly enjoined than ever; and the Emperor threatened all who had hitherto neglected or refused to conform to it, with the feverest effects of his vengeance, if they perfifted in their difobedience<sup>i</sup>.

¥551. Feb. 13.

DURING the meeting of this diet, a new attempt was made in order to procure liberty to the Landgrave. That Prince, no wife reconciled by time to his fituation, grew every day more impatient of reftraint. Having often applied to Maurice and the Elector of Brandenburg, who took every occasion of foliciting the Emperor in his behalf, though without any effect, he now commanded his fons to fummon them, with legal formality, to perform what was 23 Boox X. 1551.

<sup>i</sup> Sleid. 512. Thuan. lib. vi. 233. Goldassi Constit. Imperiales, vol. ii. 340. Another fruitle's attempt to procure the Landgrave 'iberty.

C 4

Воок Х.

24

was contained in the bond which they had granted him, by furrendering themfelves to be treated with the fame rigour as the Emperor had used him. This furnished them with a fresh pretext for renewing their application to the Emperor, together with an additional argument to enforce it. Charles firmly refolved not to grant their requeft; though at the fame time being extremely defirous to get rid of their inceffant importunity, he endeavoured to prevail on the Landgrave to give up the obligation which he had received from the two Electors. But that Prince refufing to part with a fecurity which he deemed effential to his fafety, the -Emperor boldly cut the knot which he could not untie; and by a publick deed annulled the bond which Maurice and the Elector of Brandenburg had granted, abfolving them from all their engagements to the Landgrave. No pretenfion to a power fo pernicious to fociety as that of abrogating at pleafure the most facred laws of honour, and most formal obligations of publick faith, had hitherto been formed by any but the Roman Pontiffs, who, in confequence of their claim of infallibility, arrogate the right of difpenfing with precepts and duties of every kind. All Germany was filled with aftonishment, when Charles assumed the fame prerogative. The state of subjection, to which the Empire was reduced, appeared to be more rigorous rigorous as well as intolerable than that of the BOOK X. most wretched and enflaved nations, if the Emperor by an arbitrary decree might cancel those folemn contracts, which are the foundation of that mutual confidence whereby men are held together in focial union. The Landgrave himfelf now gave up all hopes of recovering his liberty by the Emperor's confent, and endeavoured to procure it by his own address. But the plan which he had formed to deceive his guards being difcovered, fuch of his attendants as he had gained to favour his efcape were put to death, and he was confined in the citadel of Mechlin more clofely than everk.

ANOTHER transaction was carried on during this diet, with respect to an affair more nearly interefting to the Emperor, and which occafioned likewife a general alarm among the Princes of the Empire. Charles, though formed with talents which fitted him for conceiving and conducting great defigns, was not capable, as has been often observed, of bearing extraordinary fuccefs. Its operation on his mind was fo violent and intoxicating, that it elevated him beyond what was moderate or attainable, and turned his whole attention to the purfuit of vaft but chimerical objects. Such had been the effect of his victory over the confederates of k Sleid. 504. Thuan. l. vi. 234, 235.

Smalkalde.

Charles's plan of procuring the Imperial crown for his fon Philip.

25

1551.

Воок X.

Smalkalde. He did not long reft fatisfied with the fubstantial and certain advantages which were the refult of that event, but defpiling thefe, as poor or inconfiderable fruits of fuch great fuccess, he had aimed at bringing all Germany to an uniformity in religion, and at rendering the Imperial power defpotick. These were objects extremely fplendid, indeed, and alluring to an ambitious mind; the pursuit of them, however, was attended with manifest danger, and the attainment of them very precarious. But the fteps which he had already taken towards them, having been accompanied with fuch fuccefs, his imagination, warmed with contemplating this vaft defign, overlooked or defpifed all remaining difficulties. As he conceived the execution of his plan to be certain, he began to be folicitous how he might render the poffeffion of fuch an important acquifition perpetual in his family, by transmitting the German Empire, as well as the kingdoms of Spain, and his dominions in Italy and the Low-Countries, to his fon. Having long revolved this flattering idea in his mind, without communicating it, even to those ministers whom he most trusted, he had called Philip out of Spain, in hopes that his prefence would facilitate the carrying forward the fcheme.

GREAT

GREAT obstacles, however, and fuch as would have deterred any ambition lefs accuftomed to overcome difficulties, were to be furmounted. He had in the year one thousand five hundred and thirty imprudently affifted in procuring his brother Ferdinand the dignity of King of the Romans, and there was no probability that this Prince, who was still in the prime of life, and had a fon grown up to the years of manhood, would relinquish, in favour of his nephew, the near prospect of the Imperial throne, which Charles's infirmities and declining state of health opened to himself. This did not deter the Emperor from venturing to make the proposition; and when Ferdinand, notwithstanding his profound reverence for his brother, and obsequious submission to his will in other inftances, rejected it in a peremptory tone, he was not difcouraged by one repulfe. He renewed his applications to him by his fifter, Mary Queen of Hungary, to whom Ferdinand flood indebted for the crowns both of Hungary and Bohemia, and who, by her great abilities, tempered with extreme gentlenefs of disposition, had acquired an extraordinary influence over both the brothers. She entered warmly into a measure, which tended fo manifeftly to aggrandize the house of Austria; and flattering herself that she could tempt Ferdinand 1551. The obitacles that ftood in its way.

BOOK X.

27

to

Воок Х.

to renounce the reversionary possession of the Imperial dignity for an immediate establishment, fhe affured him that the Emperor, by way of compensation for his giving up his chance of fucceffion, would inftantly beftow upon him territories of very confiderable value, and pointed out in particular those of the Duke of Wurtemberg, which might be confiscated upon different pretexts. But neither by her address nor intreaties, could she induce Ferdinand to approve of a plan, which would have degraded him from the highest rank among the Monarchs of Europe to that of a fubordinate and dependent Prince. He was, at the fame time, more attached to his children, than by a rafh concession to frustrate all the high hopes in profpect of which they had been educated.

His endeavours to furmount these. Notwithstanding the immovable firmnefs which Ferdinand difcovered, the Emperor did not abandon his fcheme. He flattered himfelf that he might attain the object in view by another channel, and that it was not impossible to prevail on the Electors to cancel their former choice of Ferdinand, or at least to elect Philip a fecond King of the Romans, fubfituting him as next in fuccession to his uncle. With this view he took Philip along with him to the diet, that that the Germans might have an opportunity to obferve and become acquainted with the Prince, in behalf of whom he courted their intereft; and he himfelf employed all the arts of addrefs or infinuation to gain the Electors, and to prepare them for lending a favourable ear to the propofal. But no fooner did he venture upon mentioning it to them, than they, at once, faw and trembled at the confequences with which it would be attended. They had long felt all the inconveniences of having placed at the head of the Empire a Prince whole power and dominions were fo extensive; if they should now repeat the folly, and continue the Imperial crown, like an hereditary dignity, in the fame family, they forefaw that they would give the fon an opportunity of carrying on that fyftem of oppreffion, which the father had begun; and would put it in his power to overturn whatever was yet left entire in the ancient and venerable fabrick of the German conflitution.

THE character of the Prince, in whofe favour this extraordinary proposition was made, rendered it still lefs agreeable. Philip, though poffeffed with an infatiable defire of power, was a stranger to all the arts of conciliating good-will. Haughty, referved, and fevere, he, instead of gaining new friends, difgusted the ancient and most Philip's character difagreeable to the Germans.

29 Воок X.

Воок Х.

30

most devoted partizans of the Austrian interest. He fcorned to take the trouble of acquiring the language of the country to the government of which he aspired; nor would he condescend to pay the Germans the compliment of accommodating himfelf, during his refidence among them, to their manners and cuftoms. He allowed the Electors and most illustrious Princes in Germany, to remain in his prefence uncovered, affecting a stately and distant demeanour, which the greatest of the German Emperors, and even Charles himfelf, amidst the pride of power and victory, had never affumed<sup>1</sup>. On the other hand, Ferdinand, from the time of his arrival in Germany, had studied to render himself acceptable to the people, by a conformity to their manners, which feemed to flow from choice; and his fon Maximilian, who was born in Germany, poffeffed, in an eminent degree, fuch amiable qualities as rendered him the darling of his countrymen, and induced them to look forward to his election as a most defirable event. Their efteem and affection for him, fortified the refolution which found policy had fuggefted; and determined the Germans to prefer the popular virtues of Ferdinand and his fon, to the stubborn austerity of Philip, which interest could not foften, nor

<sup>1</sup> Frediman Andreæ Zulich Differtatio politico-hiftorica de Nævis politicis Caroli V. Lipf. 1706. 4to. p. 21.

ambition

ambition teach him to difguife. All the Electors, the ecclefiaftical as well as fecular, concurred in expreffing fuch ftrong difapprobation of the meafure, that Charles, notwithstanding the reluctance with which he gave up any point, was obliged to drop the fcheme as impracticable. By his unfeafonable perfeverance in pufhing it, he not only filled the Germans with new jealoufy of his ambitious defigns, but laid the foundation of rivalship and discord in the Austrian family, and forced his brother Ferdinand, in felfdefence, to court the Electors, particularly Maurice of Saxony, and to form fuch connexions with them, as cut off all prospect of renewing the propofal with fuccefs. Philip, fowered by his difappointment, was fent back to Spain, to be called thence when any new fcheme of ambition should render his presence necessary".

HAVING relinquished this plan of domestick ambition which had long occupied and engroffed him, Charles imagined that he would now have leifure to turn all his attention towards his grand scheme of establishing uniformity of religion in the Empire, by forcing all the contending parties to acquiesce in the decisions of the council of Trent. But such was the extent of his

<sup>m</sup> Sleid. 505. Thuan. 180. 238. Memoir. de Ribier, ii. 219. 281. 314. Adriani Istor. lib. viii. 507. 520.

3

The Pope and Emperor form a defign to recover Parma and Placentia.

Воок Х.

1551. Charles obliged to relinquifh this fcheme.

Воок Х.

his dominions, the variety of connections in which this entangled him, and the multiplicity of events to which these gave rife, as feldont allowed him to apply his whole force to any one object. The machine which he had to conduct was fo great and complicated, that an unforeseen irregularity or obstruction in one of the inferior wheels, often difconcerted the motion of the whole, and difappointed him of the moft confiderable effects which he expected. Such an unlooked-for occurrence happened at this juncture, and created new obstacles to the execution of his schemes with regard to religion. Julius III. though he had confirmed Octavio Farnefe in the poffession of the dutchy of Parma, during the first effusions of his joy and gratitude, on his promotion to the papal throne, foon began to repent of his own generofity, and to be apprehenfive of confequences which either he did not foresee, or had disregarded, while the fense of his obligations to the family of Farnese was recent. The Emperor still retained Placentia in his hands, and had not relinquished his pretensions to Parma as a fief of the Empire. Gonzaga, the governor of Milan, having, by the part which he took in the murder of the late Duke Peter Ludovico, offered an infult to the family of Farnefe, which he knew could never be forgiven, had, for that reason, vowed its ets destruction; and employed all the influence which his great abilities, as well as long fervices, gave him with the Emperor, in perfuading him to feize Parma by force of arms. Charles, in compliance with his folicitations, and that he might gratify his own defire of annexing Parma to the Milanese, listened to the proposal; and Gonzaga, ready to take encouragement from the flightest appearance of approbation, began to affemble troops, and to make other preparations for the execution of his scheme.

32

OCTAVIO, who faw the impending danger, Octavio found it neceffary, for his own fafety, to encrease courts the the garrifon of his capital, and to levy foldiers for defending the reft of the country. But as the expence of fuch an effort far exceeded his scanty revenues, he represented his situation to the Pope, and implored that protection and affiftance which was due to him as a vaffal of the church. The Imperial minister, however, had already pre-occupied the Pope's ear; and by difcourfing continually concerning the danger of giving offence to the Emperor, as well as the imprudence of supporting Octavio in an usurpation fo detrimental to the Holy See, had totally alienated him from the family of Farnese. Octavio's remonstrance and petition met, of confequence, with a cold reception; and he, defpairing of any affiftance from Julius, began to look . VOL. 1V. round D

BOOK X. 1551.

33

Farnefe affiftance of France.

BOOK X.

34

1551.

round for protection from fome other quarter. Henry II. of France was the only Prince powerful enough to afford him this protection, and fortunately he was now in a fituation which allowed him to undertake it. He had brought his tranfactions with the two British kingdoms, which had hitherto diverted his attention from the affairs of the Continent, to fuch an iffue as he defired. This he had affected partly by the vigour of his arms, partly by his dexterity in taking advantage of the political factions which raged in both kingdoms to fuch a degree, as rendered the councils of the Scots violent and precipitate, and the operations of the English feeble and unfteady. He had procured from the English favourable conditions of peace for his allies the Scots; he had prevailed on the nobles of Scotland not only to affiance their young Queen to his fon the Dauphin, but even to fend her into France, that fhe might be educated under his eye; and had recovered Boulogne, together with its dependencies, which had been conquered by Henry VIII.

His league with Henry II. HAVING gained points of fo much confequence to his crown, and difengaged himfelf with fuch honour from the burden of fupporting the Scots, and maintaining a war againft England, Henry was now at full leifure to purfue the meafures which his hereditary jealoufy of the Emperor's power naturally fuggefted. He liftened, accordingly, to the first overtures which Octavio Farnefe made him; and embracing eagerly an opportunity of recovering footing in Italy, he inftantly concluded a treaty, in which he promifed to espouse his cause, and to furnish him all the affiftance which he defired This transaction could not be long kept fecret from the Pope, who forefeeing the calamities which must follow if war were rekindled to near the ecclefiaftical state, immediately issued monitory letters, requiring Octavio to relinquish his new alliance. Upon his refufal to comply with the requifition, he foon after pronounced his fief to be forfeited, and declared war against him as a difobedient and rebellious vaffal. But as with his own forces alone, he could not hope to fubdue Octavio while fupported by fuch a powerful ally as the King of France, he had recourfe to the Emperor, who being extremely folicitous to prevent the eftablishment of the French in Parma. ordered Gonzaga to fecond Julius with all his troops. Thus the French took the field as the allies of Octavio; the Imperialists as the protectors of the Holy See; and hoftilities commenced between them, while Charles and Henry themfelves still affected to give out that they would adhere inviolably to the peace of Crefpy. The war of Parma was not diffinguished by any memorable event. Many fmall rencounters hap-D 2 pened

of

Воок X. 1551:

35

Occasions the renewal of hostilities between Charles and Henry.

Еоок X. 1551.

pened with alternate fuccefs; the French ravaged part of the ecclefiaftical territories; the Imperialifts laid wafte the Parmefan; and the latter, after having begun to befiege Parma in form, were obliged to abandon the enterprize with difgrace<sup>n</sup>.

Retards the meeting of the council.

But the motions and alarm which this war, or the preparations for it, occafioned in Italy, prevented most of the Italian prelates from repairing to Trent on the first of May, the day appointed for re-affembling the council; and though the papal legate and nuncios reforted thither, they were obliged to adjourn to the first of September, hoping fuch a number might then affemble, that they might with decency begin their deliberations. At that time, about fixty prelates, mostly from the ecclesiastical state, or from Spain, together with a few Germans, convened°. The feffion was opened with the accustomed formalities, and the fathers were about to proceed to bulinefs, when the abbot of Bellozane appeared, and prefenting letters of credence as ambaffador from the French King, demanded audience. Having obtained it, he protested, in Henry's name, against an assembly

Adviani Istor. lib. viii. 505. 514. 524. Sleid. 513.
Paruta, p. 220: Lettere del Caro foritte al nome del Card.
Farnese, tom ii. p. 11, &c. • F. Paul, 268.

called

Henry preteffs against the council.

called at fuch an improper juncture, when a war, wantonly kindled by the Pope, made it impoffible for the deputies from the Gallican church to refort to Trent in fafety, or to deliberate concerning articles of faith and discipline with the requifite tranquillity; he declared, that his mafter did not acknowledge this to be a general or oecumenick council, but must confider, and would treat it, as a particular and partial convention <sup>p</sup>. The legate affected to defpife this proteft; and the prelates proceeded, notwithftanding, to examine and decide the great points in controverly concerning the facrament of the Lord's Supper, penance, and extreme unction. This measure of the French Monarch, however, gave a deep wound to the credit of the council, at the very commencement of its deliberations. The Germans could not pay much regard to an affembly, the authority of which the fecond Prince in Chriftendom had formally difclaimed, or feel any great reverence for the decisions of a few men, who arrogated to themfelves all the rights belonging to the reprefentatives of the church universal, a title to which they had fuch poor pretensions.

THE Emperor, nevertheless, was straining his authority to the utmost, in order to establish the reputation

P Sleid. 518. Thuan. 282. F. Paul, 301.

37 Воок X.

38

BOOK X.

ISSI. Violence of the Emperor's proceedings againft the Protefrants.

THE REIGN OF THE

reputation and jurifdiction of the council. He had prevailed on the three ecclefiaftical Electors, the prelates of greatest power and dignity in the church next to the Pope, to repair thither in perfon. He had obliged feveral German bishops of inferior rank, to go to Trent themselves, or to fend their proxies. He granted an Imperial fafe-conduct to the ambaffadors nominated by the Elector of Brandenburg, the duke of Wurtemberg, and other Protestant states, to attend the council; and exhorted them to fend their divines thither, in order to propound, explain, and defend their doctrine. At the fame time, his zeal anticipated the decrees of the council; and as if the Protestant doctrines had already been condemned, he took large steps towards exterminating them. With this intention, he called together the ministers of Augsburg; and after interrogating them concerning feveral controverted points, enjoined them to teach nothing with respect to these, contrary to the tenets of the Romifh church. Upon their declining to comply with a requisition fo contrary to the dictates of their consciences, he commanded them to leave the town in three days, without revealing to any perfon the caufe of their banifhment; he prohibited them to preach for the future in any of the countries subject to the Imperial jurifdiction; and obliged them to take an oath that that they would punctually obey thefe injunctions. They were not the only victims to his zeal. The Protestant clergy, in most of the cities in the circle of Swabia, were ejected with the fame violence; and in many places, fuch magiftrates as had diffinguished themselves by their attachment to the new opinions, were difmiffed with the most abrupt irregularity, and their offices filled, in confequence of the Emperor's arbitrary appointment, with the most bigotted of their adverfaries. The Reformed worship was almost entirely suppressed throughout that extenfive province. The ancient and fundamental privileges of the free cities were violated. The people' were compelled to attend the ministration of priefts, whom they regarded with horror as idolaters; and to fubmit to the jurifdiction of magistrates, whom they detested as usurpers 9. 7

THE Emperor, after this difcovery, which was more explicit than any that he had hitherto made, of his intention to fubvert the German conflitution, as well as to extirpate the Proteftant religion, fet out for Infpruck in the Tyrol. He fixed his refidence in that city, as by its fituation in the neighbourhood of Trent, and on the confines of Italy, it appeared a commodious flation, whence he might infpect

His endeavours to fupport the council.

November.

9 Sleid. 516. 528. Thuan. 276.

the

39 Book X.

1551.

40

BOOK X. the operations of the council, and observe the progrefs of the war in the Parmefan, without lofing fight of fuch occurrences as might happen in Germany r.

The fiege of Magdeburg.

DURING these transactions, the fiege of Magdeburg was carried on with various fuccefs. At the time when Charles proferibed the citizens of Magdeburg, and put them under the ban of the Empire, he had exhorted and even enjoined all the neighbouring states to take arms against them, as rebels and common enemies. Encouraged by his exhortations as well as promifes, George of Mecklenburg, a younger brother of the reigning Duke, an active and ambitious Prince, collected a confiderable number of those foldiers of fortune who had accompanied Henry of Brunfwick in all his wild enterprizes; and though a zealous Lutheran himfelf, invaded the territories of the Magdeburgers, hoping that, by the merit of this fervice, he might procure some part of their domains to be allotted to him as an eftablishment. The citizens, unaccustomed as yet to endure patiently the calamities of war, could not be reftrained from fallying out in order to fave their lands from being laid wafte. They attacked the Duke of Mecklenburgh with more

7 Sleid. 329.

refolution

refolution than conduct, and were repulsed with BOOK X. great flaughter. But as they were animated with that unconquerable spirit, which flows from zeal for religion co-operating with the love of civil liberty, far from being difheartened by their misfortune, they prepared to defend themfelves with vigour. Many of the veteran Toldiers who had ferved in the long wars between the Emperor and King of France, crowding to their ftandards under able and experienced officers, they acquired military fkill by degrees, and added all the advantages of that to the efforts of undaunted courage. The Duke of Mecklenburg, notwithftanding the fevere blow which he had given the Magdeburgers, not daring to inveft a town ftrongly fortified, and defended by fuch a garrifon, continued to rayage the open country.

As the hopes of booty drew many adventurers to the camp of this young Prince, Maurice of Saxony began to be jealous of the power which he poffeffed by being at the head of fuch a numerous body, and marching towards Magdeburg with his own troops, affumed the supreme command of the whole army, an honour to which his high rank and great abilities, as well as the nomination of the diet, gave him an indifputable title. With this united force

Maurice takes the command of the army which carried on the fiege.

4 I

Воок X. 1551.

42

force he invefted the town, and began the fiege in form; claiming great merit with the Emperor on that account, as, from his zeal to execute the Imperial decree, he was exposing himfelf once more to the cenfures and maledictions of the party with which he agreed in religious fentiments. But the approaches to the town went on flowly; the garrifon interrupted the befiegers. by frequent fallies, in one of which the Duke of Mecklenburg was taken prisoner, levelled part of their works, and cut off the foldiers in their advanced pofts. While the citizens of Magdeburg, animated by the difcourfes of their pastors, and the foldiers encouraged by the example of their officers, endured all the hardfhips of a fiege without murmuring, and defended themselves with the fame ardour which they had at first difcovered; the troops of the besiegers acted with extreme remissness, repining at every thing that they fuffered in a fervice which they difliked. They broke out, more than once, into open mutiny, demanding the arrears of their pay, which, as the Germans fent in their contributions sparingly, and with great reluctance, towards defraying the expences of . this war, amounted to a confiderable fum . Maurice, too, had particular motives, though fuch as he durft not avow at that juncture.

2 Thuan. 277. Sleid. 514.

which induced him not to push the siege with BOOK X. vigour, and made him chufe rather to continue at the head of an army exposed to all the imputations which his dilatory proceedings drew upon him, than to precipitate a conquest that might have brought him fome acceffion of reputation, but would have rendered it neceffary to difband his forces.

AT laft, the inhabitants of the town begin- The city furrenders ning to fuffer diftress from want of provisions, and Maurice finding it impoffible to protract matters any longer without filling the Emperor with fuch fufpicions as might have difconcerted all his measures, he concluded a treaty of capitulation with the city upon the following conditions; that the Magdeburgers fhould humbly implore pardon of the Emperor; that they should not for the future take arms, or enter into any alliance against the house of Austria; Novemb. 3. that they fhould fubmit to the authority of the Imperial chamber; that they fhould conform to the decree of the diet at Augfburg with respect to religion; that the new fortifications added to the town fhould be demolifhed; that they should pay a fine of fifty thousand crowns, deliver up twelve pieces of ordnance to the Emperor, and fet the Duke of Mecklenburg, together with their other prifoners, at liberty, withour to Maurice.

43

1551.

BOOK X. 1551.

44

without ranfom. Next day their garrifon marched out, and Maurice took poffession of the town with great military pomp.

Maurice's views at this juncture.

BEFORE the terms of capitulation were fettled, Maurice had held many conferences with Albert count Mansfeldt, who had the chief command in Magdeburg. He confulted likewife with count Heideck, an officer who had ferved with great reputation in the army of the league of Smalkalde, whom the Emperor had proferibed on account of his zeal for that caufe, , but whom Maurice had, notwithstanding, fecretly engaged in his fervice, and admitted into the most intimate confidence. To them he communicated a fcheme, which he had long revolved in his mind, for procuring liberty to kis father-in-law the Landgrave, for vindicating the privileges of the Germanick body, and fetting bounds to the dangerous encroachments of the Imperial power. Having deliberated. with them concerning the measures which might be neceffary for fecuring the fuccels of fuch an arduous enterprize, he gave Mansfeldt fecret affurances that the fortifications of Magdeburg fhould not be deftroyed, and that the inhabitants should neither be diffurbed in the exercife of their religion, nor be deprived of any of their ancient immunities. In order to engage Mauric .

9

Maurice more thoroughly from confiderations of interest to fulfil these engagements, the senate of Magdeburg elected him their Burgrave, a dignity which had formerly belonged to the electoral house of Saxony, and which entitled him to a very ample jurisdiction not only in the city but in its dependencies '.

Thus the citizens of Magdeburg, after enduring a fiege of twelve months, and ftruggling for their liberties, religious and civil, with an invincible fortitude, worthy of the cause in which it was exerted, had at last the good fortune to conclude a treaty, which left them in a better condition than the reft of their countrymen, whom their timidity or want of publick fpirit had betrayed into fuch mean fubmiffions to the Emperor. But while a great part of Germany applauded the gallant conduct of the Magdeburgers, and rejoiced in their having escaped the deftruction with which they had been threatened, all admired Maurice's address in the conduct of his negociation with them, as well as the dexterity with which he converted every event to his own advantage. They faw, with amazement, that after having afflicted the Magdeburgers during many months with all the calamities

<sup>e</sup> Sleid. 528. Thuan. 276. Obfidionis Magdeburgici Defcriptio per Sebaft. Besielmeierum, ap. Scard. ii. 518.

The advantages he derived from his negociations with the Magdeburgers.

Вок Х.

46

calamities of war, he was at last, by their voluntary election, vefted with fupreme authority in that city which he had fo lately befieged: that after having been fo long the object of their fatirical invectives as an apostate, and an enemy to the religion which he profeffed, they feemed now to place unbounded confidence in his zeal and good-will". At the fame time, the publick articles in the treaty of capitulation were fo perfectly conformable to those which the Emperor had granted to the other Protestant cities, and Maurice took fuch care to magnify his merit in having reduced a place which had defended itself with fo much obstinacy, that Charles, far from fuspecting any thing fraudulent or collusive in the terms of accommodation, ratified them without hefitation, and abfolved the Magdeburgers from the fentence of ban which had been denounced against them.

H's expedient for keeping an army on foot. THE only point that now remained to embarrafs Maurice was how to keep together the veteran troops which had ferved under him, as well as those which had been employed in the defence of the town. For this, too, he found an expedient with fingular art and felicity. His schemes against the Emperor were not yet fo fully ripened, that he durst venture to disclose

" Arnoldi vita Maurit. apud Menken, ii. 1227.

7

them,

them, and proceed openly to carry them into Book X. execution. The winter was approaching, which made it impossible to take the field immediately. He was afraid that it would give a premature alarm to the Emperor, if he should retain such a confiderable body in his pay until the feafon of action returned in the fpring. As foon then as Magdeburg opened its gates, he fent home his Saxon fubjects, whom he could command to take arms and re-affemble on the fhorteft warning; and at the fame time, paying part of the arrears due to the mercenary troops, who had followed his ftandard, as well as to the foldiers who had ferved in the garrifon, he abfolved them from their respective oaths of fidelity, and disbanded them. But the moment he gave them their discharge, George Duke of Mecklenburg, who was now fet at liberty, offered to take them into his fervice, and to become furety for the payment of what was still owing to them. As fuch adventurers were accultomed often to change mafters, they inftantly accepted the offer. Thus these troops were kept united, and ready to march wherever Maurice should call them, while the Emperor, deceived by this artifice, and imagining that the Duke of Mecklenburg had hired them with an intention to affert his claim to a part of his brother's territories by force of arms, fuffered this tranfaction 1551.

47

Воок Х.

48

action to pass without observation, as if it had been a matter of no confequence*.

His addrefs " in concealing his intentions from the Emperor.

HAVING ventured to take these shich were of fo much confequence towards the execution of his schemes, Maurice, that he might divert the Emperor from observing their tendency too narrowly, and prevent the fufpicions which that must have excited, faw the necessity of employing fome new artifice in order to engage his attention, and to confirm him in his present fecurity. As he knew that the chief object of the Emperor's folicitude at this juncture, was how he might prevail with the Protestant States of Germany to recognife the authority of the council of Trent, and to fend thither ambaffadors in their own name, as well as deputies from their refpective churches, he took hold of this predominating paffion in order to amuse and to deceive him. He affected a wonderful zeal to gratify Charles in what he defired with regard to this matter; he nominated ambaffadors, whom he empowered to attend the council; he made choice of Melancthon and fome of the most eminent among his brethren to prepare a confession of faith, and to lay it before that affembly. After his example,

* Thuan. 278. Struv. corp. hift. Germ. 1064. Arnoldi vita Mauritii apud Menken, ii. 1227.

example, and probably in confequence of his BOOK X. folicitations, the Duke of Wurtemberg, the city of Strafburg, and other Protestant States appointed ambaffadors and divines to attend the council. They all applied to the Emperor for his fafe-conduct, which they obtained in the most ample form. This was deemed fufficient for the fecurity of the ambaffadors, and they proceeded accordingly on their journey; but a feparate fafe-conduct from the council itfelf was demanded for the Protestant divines. The fate of John Hufs and Jerome of Prague, whom the council of Constance, in the preceding century, had condemned to the flames without regarding the Imperial fafe-conduct which had been granted them, rendered this precaution prudent and neceffary. But as the Pope was no lefs unwilling that the Protestants should be admitted to an hearing in the council, than the Emperor had been eager in bringing them to demand it, the legate by promifes and threats prevailed on the fathers of the council to decline iffuing a fafe-conduct in the fame form with that which the council of Bafil had granted to the followers of Hufs. The Protestants, on their part, infifted upon the council's copying the precife words of that inftrument. The Imperial ambaffadors interposed, in order to obtain what would fatisfy them. Alterations in the VOL. IV. form E.

49

Всок Х.

50

form of the writ were propofed; expedients were fuggefted; protefts and counter-protefts were taken : the legate, together with his affociates, laboured to gain their point by artifice and chicane; the Protestants adhered to theirs with firmnefs and obftinacy. An account of every thing that passed in Trent was transmitted to the Emperor at Infpruck, who, attempting, from an excess of zeal, or of confidence in his own address, to reconcile the contending parties, was involved in a labyrinth of inextricable negociations. By means of this, however, Maurice gained all that he had in view; the Emperor's time was wholly engroffed, and his attention diverted; while he himfelf had leifure to mature his fchemes, to carry on his intrigues, and to finish his preparations, before he threw off the mafk, and ftruck the blow which he had. fo long meditated y.

The Affairs of Hungary.

BUT previous to the hiftory of Maurice's operations, fome account muft be given of a new revolution in Hungary, which contributed not a little towards their producing fuch extraordinary effects. When Solyman, in the year 1541, by a ftratagem, which fuited the bafe and infidious policy of a petty ufurper, rather than the magnanimity of a mighty conqueror,

7 Sleid. 526. 529. F. Paul, 323. 338. Thuan. 286. deprived deprived the young King of Hungary of the dominions which his father had left him, he had granted that unfortunate Prince the country of Tranfylvania, a province of his paternal kingdom. The government of this, together with the care of educating the young King, for he still allowed him to retain that title, though he had rendered it only an empty name, he committed to the Queen and Martinuzzi bishop of Waradin, whom the late King had appointed his fons guardians and regents of his dominions, at a time when those offices were of greater importance. This co-ordinate jurifdiction occafioned the fame diffentions in a fmall principality as it would have excited in a great kingdom; an ambitious young Queen, confcious of her capacity for governing, and an high-fpirited prelate, fond of power, contending who should engrofs the greatest share in the administration. Each had their partizans among the nobles; but as Martinuzzi, by his great talents, began to acquire the afcendant, Ifabella turned his own arts against him, and courted the protection of the Turks.

THE neighbouring Bashas, jealous of the Martinuzzi bishop's power as well as abilities, readily pro- dinand's mifed her the aid which fhe demanded, and in that would foon have obliged Martinuzzi to have favours Ferpretenfions kingdom.

given

51 BOOK X.

Воок Х.

1551.

given up to her the fole direction of affairs, if his ambition, fertile in expedients, had not fuggested to him a new measure, and one that tended not only to preferve but to enlarge his authority. Having concluded an agreement with the Queen, by the mediation of fome of the nobles, who were folicitous to fave their country from the calamities of a civil war, he fecretly difpatched one of his confidents to Vienna, and entered into a negociation with Ferdinand. As it was no difficult matter to perfuade Ferdinand, that the fame man whofe enmity and intrigues had driven him out of a great part of his Hungarian dominions, might, upon a reconciliation, become equally inftrumental in recovering them, he liftened eagerly to the first overtures of an union with that prelate. Martinuzzi allured him by fuch profpects of advantage, and engaged, with fo much confidence, that he would prevail on the moft powerful of the Hungarian nobles to take arms in his favour, that Ferdinand, notwithstanding his truce with Solyman, agreed to invade Tranfylvania. The command of the troops deftined for that fervice, confifting of veteran Spanish and German foldiers, was given to Caftaldo Marquis de Piadena, an officer formed by the famous Marquis de Pescara, whom he strongly refembled both in his enterprizing genius for civil 1000 civil bufinefs, and in his great knowledge in FOOK X. the art of war. This army, more formidable by the discipline of the foldiers, and the abilities of the general, than by its numbers, was powerfully feconded by Martinuzzi and his faction among the Hungarians. As the Turkifh Bashas, the Sultan himself being at the head of his army on the frontiers of Persia, could not afford the Queen fuch immediate or effectual affistance as the exigency of her affairs required, fhe quickly loft all hopes of being able to retain any longer the authority which the poffeffed as regent, and even began to defpair of her fon's fafety.

MARTINUZZI did not fuffer this favourable opportunity of accomplishing his own defigns to pafs unimproved, <sup>c</sup>and ventured, while fhe was in this state of dejection, to lay before her a propofal, which at any other time fhe would have rejected with difdain. He reprefented how impossible it was for her to resist Ferdinand's victorious arms; that even if the Turks fhould enable her to make head against them, she would be far from changing her condition to the better, and could not confider them as deliverers, but as masters, to whose commands she must fubmit; he conjured her, therefore, as she regarded her own dignity, the fafety of her fon, E 3 10 or the fecurity of Chriftendom, rather to give up Transylvania to Ferdinand, and to make over to him her fon's title to the crown of Hungary, than to allow both to be usurped by the inveterate enemy of the Christian faith. At the fame time, he promised her, in Ferdinand's name, a compensation for herself, as well as for her fon, fuitable to their rank, and proportional to the value of what they were to facri-Ifabella, deferted by fome of her adhefice. rents, distrusting others, destitute of friends, and furrounded by Castaldo's and Martinuzzi's troops, fubscribed these hard conditions, though with a reluctant hand. Upon this, fhe furrendered fuch places of ftrength as were ftill in her poffeffion, the gave up all the enfigns of royalty, particularly a crown of gold, which, as the Hungarians believed, had descended from heaven, and conferred on him who wore it an undoubted right to the throne. As fhe could not bear to remain a private perfon, in a country where fhe had once enjoyed fovereign power, fhe inftantly fet out with her fon for Silefia, in order to take poffeffion of the principalities of Oppelan and Ratibor, the investiture of which Ferdinand had engaged to grant her fon, and likewife to beftow one of his daughters upon him in marriage.

53 1551.

The fuccefs of his meafutes.

54 Воок X. 1551.

UPON

UPON the refignation of the young King, Martinuzzi, and after his example the reft of the Tranfylvanian grandees, fwore allegiance to Ferdinand; who, in order to teftify his grateful fenfe of the zeal as well as fuccefs with which that prelate had ferved him, affected to diftinguish him by every possible mark of favour and confidence. He appointed him governor of Tranfylvania, with almost unlimited authority; he ordered Castaldo to pay the greatest deference to his opinion and commands; he increafed his revenues, which were already very great, by new appointments; he nominated him archbishop of Gran, and prevailed on the Pope to raife him to the dignity of a Cardinal. All this oftentation of good-will, however, was void of fincerity, and calculated to conceal fentiments the most perfectly its reverse. Ferdinand dreaded Martinuzzi's abilities; distrusted his fidelity; and forefaw, that as his extensive authority enabled him to check any attempt towards circumfcribing or abolifhing the extensive privileges which the Hungarian nobility poffeffed, he would ftand forth, on every occasion, the guardian of the liberties of his country, rather than act the part of a viceroy devoted to the will of his fovereign.

For this reason, he fecretly gave it in charge to Castaldo to watch his motions, to guard E 4 against Ferdinand begins to form defigns againft him.

55

BOOK X.

1551. Appointed governor of that part of Hungary which was fubject to Ferdinand. Воок Х.

against his defigns, and to thwart his measures. But Martinuzzi, either because he did not perceive that Castaldo was placed as a fpy on his actions, or becaufe he despifed Ferdinand's infidious arts, affumed the direction of the war against the Turks with his usual tone of authority, and conducted it with great magnanimity, and no lefs fuccefs. He recovered fome places of which the Infidels had taken poffeffion; he rendered their attempts to reduce others abortive; and eftablished Ferdinand's authority not only in Tranfylvania, but in the Bannat of Temeswar, and several of the countries adjacent. In carrying on these operations, he often differed in fentiments from Castaldo and his officers, and treated the Turkish prisoners with a degree not only of humanity, but even of generofity, which Caftaldo loudly condemned. This was reprefented at Vienna as an artful method of courting the friendship of the Infidels, that, by fecuring their protection, he might shake off all dependence upon the fovereign whom he now acknowledged. Though Martinuzzi, in justification of his own conduct, contended that it was impolitick to exafperate an enemy prone to revenge by unneceffary feverities, Caftaldo's accufations gained credit with Ferdinand, prepoffeffed already against Martinuzzi, and jealous of every thing that could endanger his own authority in Hungary, in proportion as he knew iţ it to be precarious and ill eftablished. These BOOK X. fuspicions Castaldo confirmed and strengthened, by the intelligence which he transmitted continually to his confidents at Vienna. By mifreprefenting what was innocent, and putting the worft construction on what feemed dubious in Martinuzzi's conduct; by imputing to him defigns which he never formed, and charging him with actions of which he was not guilty; he at last convinced Ferdinand, that, in order to preferve his Hungarian crown, he must cut off that ambitious prelate. But Ferdinand, forefeeing that it would be dangerous to proceed in the regular course of law against a subject of such exorbitant power, as enabled him to fet his fovereign at defiance, determined to employ violence, in order to obtain that fatisfaction which the laws were too feeble to afford him.

56

HE iffued his orders accordingly to Castaldo, He is affatwho willingly undertook that infamous fervice. Having communicated the defign to fome Italian and Spanish officers whom he could trust, and concerted with them the plan of executing it, they entered Martinuzzi's apartment, early one Dec. 18. morning, under pretence of prefenting to him fome difpatches which were to be fent off immediately to Vienna; and while he perused a paper with attention, one of their number ftruck him with finated by his command.

BOOK X.

The effect of that violent action, with his poignard in the throat. The blow was not mortal. Martinuzzi started up with the intrepidity natural to him, and grappling the affaffin, threw him to the ground. But the other conspirators rushing in, an old man, unarmed, and alone, unable long to fuftain fuch an unequal conflict, funk under the wounds which he received from fo many hands. Their dread of the foreign troops reftrained the Tranfylvanians from rifing in arms, in order to take vengeance on the murderers of a prelate who had long been the object of their love as well as . veneration. They spoke of the deed, however, with horror and execration; and exclaimed against Ferdinand, whom neither gratitude for recent and important fervices, nor reverence for a character confidered as facred and inviolable among Chriftians, 'could reftrain from fhedding the blood of a man, whose only crime was attachment to his native country. The nobles, detefting the jealous as well as cruel policy of a court, which, upon uncertain and improbable furmises, had given up a person, no less conspi-. cuous for his merit than his rank, to be butchered by affaffins, either retired to their own eftates, or if they continued with the Auftrian army, grew cold to the fervice. The Turks, encouraged by the death of an enemy whofe abilities they knew and dreaded, prepared to renew hostilities hoftilities early in the fpring; and inftead of the BOOK X. fecurity which Ferdinand had expected from the removal of Martinuzzi, it was evident that his territories in Hungary were about to be attacked with greater vigour, and defended with lefs zeal, than ever <sup>a</sup>.

By this time, Maurice having almost finished his intrigues and preparations, was on the point of declaring his intentions openly, and of taking the field against the Emperor. His first care, after he came to this refolution, was to disclaim that narrow and bigotted maxim of the confederates of Smalkalde, which had led them to fhun all connexion with foreigners. He had observed how fatal this had been to their cause; and inftructed by their error, he was as eager to court the protection of Henry II. as they had been folicitous to prevent the interpolition of Francis I. Happily for him, he found Henry in a disposition to listen to the first overture on his part, and in a fituation which enabled him to bring the whole force of the French monarchy into action. Henry had long observed the progrefs of the Emperor's arms with jealoufy, and wished to diftinguish himself by trying his

<sup>a</sup> Sleid. 535. Thuan. lib. ix. 309, &c. Istuanhaffi Hift. Regn. Hungarici, lib. xvi. 189, &c. Mem. de Ribier, ii. 871. Natalis Comitis Hiftoria, lib. iv. 84, &c.

ftrength

I

Maurice courts the protection of the French King.

Во, ок X.

ftrength against the fame enemy, whom it had been the glory of his father's reign to oppose. He had laid hold on the first opportunity in his power of thwarting the Emperor's defigns, by taking the Duke of Parma under his protection; and hostilities were already begun, not only in that dutchy but in Piedmont. Having terminated the war with England by a peace, no lefs advantageous to himfelf than honourable for his allies the Scots, the restless and enterprizing courage of his nobles was impatient to display itself on fome theatre of action more confpicuous than the petty operations in Parma or Piedmont afforded them.

His treaty with him. JOHN DE FIESSE, bishop of Bayonne, whom Henry had fent into Germany, under pretence of hiring troops to be employed in Italy, was empowered to conclude a treaty in form with Maurice and his affociates. As it would have been very indecent in a King of France to have undertaken the defence of the Protestant church, the interests of religion, how much soever they might be affected by the treaty, were not once mentioned in any of the articles. Religious concerns, they pretended to commit entirely to the disposition of divine providence ; the only motives affigned for their prefent confederacy against Charles, were to procure the Landgrave

Landgrave liberty, and to prevent the fubver- Book X. fion of the ancient conflitution and laws of the German Empire. In order to accomplish these ends, it was agreed, that all the contracting parties should, at the fame time, declare war against the Emperor; that neither peace nor truce should be made but by common confent, nor without including each of the confederates; that, in order to guard against the inconveniencies of anarchy, or of pretenfions to joint command, Maurice should be acknowledged as head of the German confederates, with abfolute authority in all military affairs; that Maurice and his affociates should bring into the field feven thousand horse, with a proportional number of infantry; that towards the fublistence of this army, during the three first months of the war, Henry fhould contribute two hundred and forty thousand crowns, and afterwards fixty thousand crowns a-month, as long as they continued in arms; that Henry should attack the Emperor on the fide of Lorrain with a powerful army; that if it were found requifite to elect a new Emperor, fuch a perfon should be nominated as shall be agreeable to the King of France<sup>b</sup>. This treaty was concluded on the fifth of October, fome time before Magdeburg • Recueil des Traitez, tom. ii. 258. Thuan. lib. viii. 279.

furrendered,

Воок Х.

62

furrendered, and the preparatory negociations were conducted with fuch profound fecrecy, that of all the Princes who afterwards acceded to it, Maurice communicated what he was carrying on to two only, John Albert, the reigning Duke of Mecklenburg, and William of Heffe, the Landgrave's eldeft fon. The league itfelf was no lefs anxioufly concealed, and with fuch fortunate care, that no rumour concerning it reached the ears of the Emperor or his minifters; nor do they feem to have conceived the moft diftant fufpicion of fuch a tranfaction.

Solicits the aid of Edward VI. of England. At the fame time, with a folicitude which was careful to draw fome acceffion of ftrength from every quarter, Maurice applied to Edward VI. of England, and, requefted a fubfidy of four hundred thoufand crowns for the fupport of a confederacy formed in defence of the Proteftant religion. But the factions which prevailed in the Englifh court during the minority of that Prince, and which deprived both the councils and arms of the nation of their wonted vigour, left the Englifh minifters neither time nor inclination to attend to foreign affairs, and prevented Maurice's obtaining that aid, which their zealfor the Reformation would have prompted them to grant him <sup>c</sup>.

• Burnet's Hift. of the Reform. vol. ii. Append. 37. MAURICE,

MAURICE, however, having fecured the protection of fuch a powerful Monarch as Henry II. proceeded with great confidence, but with equal caution, to execute his plan. As he judged it neceffary to make one effort more, in order to obtain the Emperor's confent that the Landgrave should be fet at liberty, he fent a folemn December. embaffy, in his own name, and in that of the Elector of Brandenburg, to Infpruck. After refuming, at great length, all the facts and arguments upon which they founded their claim, and reprefenting, in the ftrongest terms, the peculiar engagements which bound them to be fo affiduous in their folicitations, they renewed the request in behalf of the unfortunate prisoner. which they had fo often preferred in vain. The Elector Palatine, the Duke of Wurtemberg, the Dukes of Mecklenburg, the Duke of Deuxponts, the Marquis of Brandenburg Bareith, and the Marquis of Baden, by their ambaffadors, concurred with them in their fuit. Letters were likewife delivered to the fame effect from the King of Denmark, the Duke of Bavaria, and the Dukes of Lunenburg. Even the King of the Romans joined in this application, being moved with compassion towards the Landgrave in his wretched fituation, or influenced, perhaps, by a fecret jealoufy of his brother's power and defigns, which, fince his attempt to alter the order of succession in the Empire, he had

63

BOOK X. Langend

ISSI. Demands once more that the Landgrave fhould be fet at liberty.

 $\underbrace{B_{00K} X}_{1551}$  had come to view with other eyes, and dreaded to a great degree.

> BUT Charles, conftant to his own fystem with regard to the Landgrave, eluded a demand urged by fuch powerful interceffors; and having declared that he would communicate his refolution concerning the matter to Maurice as foon as he arrived at Infpruck, where he was every day expected, he did not deign to descend into any more particular explication of his intentions<sup>d</sup>. This application, though of no benefit to the Landgrave, was of great advantage to Maurice. It ferved to juftify his subsequent proceedings, and to demonstrate the necessity of employing arms in order to extort that equitable conceffion, which his mediation or intreaty could not obtain. It was of use, too, to confirm the Emperor in his fecurity, as both the folemnity of the application, and the folicitude with which fo many Princes were drawn in to enforce it, led him to conclude, that Maurice placed all his hopes of reftoring the Landgrave to liberty, in gaining his confent to difmifs him.

1552. Maurice continues to amufe the Emperor,

64

MAURICE employed artifices still more refined to conceal his machinations, to amuse the Emperor, and to gain time. He affected to be more d Sleid. 531. Thuan. lib. viii. 280.

folicitous /

folicitous than ever to find out fome expedient for removing the difficulties with regard to the fafe-conduct for the Protestant divines appointed to attend the council, fo that they might repair thither without any apprehension of danger. His ambaffadors at Trent had frequent conferences concerning this matter with the Imperial ambaffadors in that city, and laid open their fentiments to them with the appearance of the most unreferved confidence. He was willing, at last, to have it believed, that he thought all differences with refpect to this preliminary article were on the point of being adjusted; and in order to give credit to this opinion, he commanded Melancthon, together with his brethren, to fet out on their journey to Trent. At the fame time, he held a clofe correspondence with the Imperial court at Infpruck, and renewed on every occasion his professions not only of fidelity but of attachment to the Emperor. He talked continually of his intention of going to Infpruck in perfon; he ordered a houfe to be hired for him in that city, and to be fitted up with the greatest dispatch for his reception ".

But, profoundly fkilled as Maurice was in the arts of deceit, and impenetrable as he thought the veil to be, under which he con-

The Emperer conceives fome fufpicion concerning h's intentions.

<sup>e</sup> Arnoldi vita Maurit. ap. Menken, ii. 1229. Vol. IV. F cealed 65 Воок X. 1552.

BOOK X.

1552.

cealed his defigns, there were feveral things in his conduct which alarmed the Emperor amidit his fecurity, and tempted him frequently to fuspect that he was meditating fomething extraordinary. As thefe fufpicions took their rife from circumstances inconfiderable in themfelves, or of an ambiguous as well as uncertain nature, they were more than counterbalanced by Maurice's addrefs; and the Emperor would not, lightly, give up his confidence in a man, whom he had once trusted and loaded with favours. One particular alone feemed to be of fuch confequence, that he thought it necessary to demand an explanation with regard to it. The troops, which George of Mecklenburg had taken into pay after the capitulation of Magdeburg, having fixed their quarters in Thuringia, lived at diferetion on the lands of the rich ecclefiasticks in their neighbourhood. Their licence and rapacioufnefs were intolerable. Such as felt or dreaded their exactions, complained loudly to the Emperor, and reprefented them as a body of men kept in readiness for some desperate enterprize. But Maurice, partly by extenuating the enormities of which they had been guilty, partly by reprefenting the impoffibility of difbanding thefe troops, or of keeping them to regular discipline, unless the arrears still due to them by the Emperor were paid, either removed the apprehenfions which this had had occafioned, or as Charles was not in a con- Book X. dition to fatisfy the demands of these foldiers, obliged him to be filent with regard to the matterf.

THE time of action was now approaching. Maurice Maurice had privately difpatched Albert of action. Brandenburg to Paris, in order to confirm his league with Henry, and to haften the march of the French army. He had taken measures to bring his own fubjects together on the first fummons; he had provided for the fecurity of Saxony while he should be absent with the army; and he held the troops in Thuringia, on which he chiefly depended, ready to advance on a moment's warning. All these complicated operations were carried on without being difcovered by the court at Infpruck, and the Emperor remained there in perfect tranquillity, bufied entirely in counteracting the intrigues of the Pope's legate at Trent, and in fettling the conditions on which the Protestant divines should be admitted into the council, as if there had not been any transaction of greater moment in agitation.

THIS credulous fecurity in a Prince, who by his fagacity in observing the conduct of all round

> f Sleid. 549. Thuan. 339. F 2

him

1552.

BOOK X. 1552. Circumfances which contributed to deceive the Emperor, and his miniflers. him was commonly led to an excels of diftruft, may feem unaccountable, and has been imputed to infatuation. But befides the exquisite addrefs with which Maurice concealed his intentions, two circumstances contributed to the delusion. The gout had returned upon Charles foon after his arrival at Infpruck, with an increafe of violence; and his conftitution being broken by fuch frequent attacks, he was feldom. able to exert his natural vigour of mind, or to confider affairs with his usual vigilance and penetration; and Granvelle, bishop of Arras, his prime minister, though one of the most fubtle statesmen of that, or perhaps of any age, was on this occasion the dupe of his own craft. He entertained fuch an high opinion of his own abilities, and held the political talents of the Germans in fuch contempt, that he defpifed all the intimations given him concerning Maurice's fecret machinations, or the dangerous defigns which he was carrying on. When the Duke of Alva, whofe dark fufpicious mind harboured many doubts concerning the Elector's fincerity, proposed calling him immediately to court to anfwer for his conduct, Granvelle replied with great fcorn, That thefe apprehenfions were groundlefs, and that a drunken German head was too grofs to form any fcheme which he could not eafily penetrate and baffle. Nor did he he affume this peremptory tone merely from BOOK X. confidence in his own difcernment; he had bribed two of Maurice's ministers, and received from them frequent and minute information concerning all their mafter's motions. But through this very channel, by which he expected to gain accefs to all Maurice's counfels, and even to his thoughts, fuch intelligence was conveyed to him as completed his deception. Maurice fortunately difcovered the correspondence of the two traitors with Granvelle, but inftead of punishing them for their crime, he dexteroufly availed himfelf of their fraud, and turned his own arts against the bishop. He affected to treat these ministers with greater confidence than ever; he admitted them to his confultations; he feemed to lay open his heart to them; and taking care all the while to let them be acquainted with nothing but what it was his interest should be known, they transmitted to Infpruck fuch accounts as poffeffed Granvelle with a firm belief of his fincerity as well as good intentions<sup>s</sup>. The Emperor himfelf, in the fulnefs of fecurity, was fo little moved by a memorial, in name of the ecclefiaftical electors, admonishing him to be on his guard against Maurice, that he made light of this intelligence; and his answer to them

68

Melvil's Memoirs, fol. edit. p. 12.

F 3

abounds

69 1552.

70 Воок X. 1552.

abounds with declarations of his entire and confident reliance on the fidelity as well as attachment of that Prince<sup>h</sup>.

Maurice takes the field against the Emperor.

Ar last Maurice's preparations were completed, and he had the fatisfaction to find that his intrigues and defigns were still unknown. But, though now ready to take the field, he did not lay afide the arts which he had hitherto employed; and by one piece of craft more, he deceived his enemies a few days longer. He gave out, that he was about to begin that journey to Infpruck of which he had fo often talked, and he took one of the ministers whom Granvelle had bribed, to attend him thither. After travelling post a few stages, he pretended to be indifposed by the fatigue of the journey, and difpatching the fuspected minister to make his apology to the Emperor for this delay, and to affure him that he would be at Infpruck within a few days; he mounted on horfeback, as foon as this fpy on his actions was gone, rode full fpeed towards Thuringia, joined his army, which amounted to twenty thousand foot and five thousand horse, and put it immediately in motion *.

March 18.

h Sleid. 535.

* Melv Mem. p. 13. These circumstances concerning the Saxon ministers whom Granvelle had br.bed, are not mentioned

AT

AT the fame time he published a manifesto containing his reasons for taking arms. These were three in number; That he might fecure the Protestant religion, which was threatened with immediate destruction; That he might maintain the conftitution and laws of the Empire, and fave Germany from being fubjected to the dominion of an abfolute monarch; That he might deliver the Landgrave of Heffe from the miferies of a long and unjust imprifonment. By the first, he roused all the favourers of the Reformation, a party formidable by their zeal as well as numbers, and rendered defperate by oppression. By the second, he interested all the friends of liberty, Catholicks no lefs than Protestants, and made it their interest to unite with him in afferting the rights and privileges common to both. The third, befides the glory which he acquired by his zeal to fulfil his engagements to the unhappy prifoner, was become a caufe of general concern, not only from the compassion which the Landgrave's fufferings excited, but from indignation at the injuffice and rigour of the Emperor's proceedings against him. Together with Maurice's manifesto, another appeared in the name of Albert Marquis mentioned by the German hiftorians; but as Sir James Melvil received his information from the Elector Palatine, and as they are perfectly agreeable to the reft of Maurice's conduct, they may be confidered as authentick.

Воок Х.

1552. Publifhes a manifefto juftifying his conduct.

71

Воок X. 1552.

72 of Brandenburg Culmbach, who had joined him with a body of adventurers whom he had drawn together. The fame grievances which Maurice had pointed out are mentioned in it, but with an excefs of virulence and animofity fuitable to the character of the Prince in whofe name it was published.

He is powerfully fupported by the French King,

THE King-of France added to these a manifefto in his own name; in which, after taking notice of the ancient alliance between the French and German nations, both descended from the fame anceftors; and after mentioning the applications, which, in confequence of this, fome of the most illustrious among the German Princes had made to him for his protection; he declared that he now took arms to re-eftablish the ancient conftitution of the Empire, to deliver fome of its Princes from captivity, and to fecure the privileges and independence of all the members of the Germanick body. In this manifesto, Henry affumed the extraordinary title of Protector of the Liberties of Germany, and of its captive Princes; and there was engraved on it a cap, the ancient fymbol of freedom, placed between two daggers, in order to intimate to the Germans, that this bleffing was to be acquired and fecured by force of arms i.

i Sleid. 549. Thuan. lib. x. 339. Mem. de Ribier, ii, 371. MAURICE

MAURICE had now a very different part to act, but his flexible genius was capable of accommodating itself to every fituation. The moment he took arms, he was as bold and en. terprizing in the field, as he had been cautious and crafty in the cabinet. He advanced by rapid marches towards the Upper Germany. All the towns in his way opened their gates to him. He reinstated the magistrates whom the Emperor had deposed, and gave possession of the churches to the Protestant ministers whom He directed his march to he had ejected. Augfburg, and as the Imperial garrifon, which was too inconfiderable to think of defending it, retired immediately, he took poffession of that great city, and made the fame changes there as in the towns through which he had paffed k.

No words can express the Emperor's aftonishment and confernation at events fo unexpected. He faw a great number of the German Princes in arms against him, and the reft either ready to join them, or wishing fuccess to their enterprize. He beheld a powerful Monarch united with them in close league, feconding their operations in person at the head of a formidable army, while he, through negligence and credulity, which exposed him no less to fcorn than * Sleid. 555. Thuan. 342.

BOOK X.

73

1552. Maurice's operations in the field.

April 1.

The Emperor's aftonifhment and diffrefs.

Воок Х.

74

to danger, had neither made nor was in condition to make any effectual provision either for crushing his rebellious subjects, or refisting the invalion of the foreign enemy. - Part of his Spanish troops had been ordered into Hungary against the Turks; the rest had marched back to Italy upon occasion of the war in the dutchy of Parma. The bands of veteran Germans hac been difmiffed, becaufe he was not able to pay them; or had entered into Maurice's fervice after the fiege of Magdeburg; and he remained at Infpruck with a body of foldiers hardly ftrong enough to guard his own perfon. His treafury was as much exhausted, as his army was reduced. He had received no remittances for fome time from the new world. He had forfeited all credit with the merchants of Genoa and Venice, who refused to lend him money, though tempted by the offer of exorbitant intereft. Thus Charles, though undoubtedly the most confiderable potentate in Christendom, and capable of exerting the greateft ftrength, as his power, notwithstanding the violent attack made upon it, was still unimpaired, found himself in a fituation which rendered him unable to make fuch a fudden and vigorous effort as the juncture required, and was necessary to have faved him from the prefent danger.

IN

In this fituation, the Emperor placed all his hopes on negociating; the only refource of fuch as are confcious of their own weaknefs. But thinking it inconfistent with his dignity to make the first advances to subjects who were in arms against him, he avoided that indecorum by employing the mediation of his brother Ferdinand. Maurice confiding in his own talents to conduct any negociation in fuch a manner as to derive advantage from it, and hoping that by the appearance of facility in hearkening to the hirst overture of accommodation, he might amuse the Emperor and tempt him to flacken the activity with which he was now preparing to defend himfelf, readily agreed to an interview with Ferdinand in the town of Lints in Auftria: and having left his army to proceed on its march under the command of the Duke of Mecklenburg, he repaired thither.

MEANWHILE the King of France punctually fulfilled his engagements to his allies. He took the field early with a numerous and well appointed army, and marching directly into Lorrain, Toul and Verdun opened their gates at his approach. His forces appeared next before Metz, and that city by a fraudulent ftratagem of the Conftable Montmorency, who having obtained permission to pass through it with a fmall guard, introduced as many troops as were fufficient 3

BOOK X.

75

1552. Endeavours to gain time by a negociation.

Progrefs of the French army.

76 Воок X.

fufficient to overpower the garrifon, was likewife feized without bloodfhed. Henry made his entry into all thefe towns with great pomp; he obliged the inhabitants to fwear allegiance to him, and annexed thofe important conquefts to the French Monarchy. He left a ftrong garrifon in Metz. From thence he advanced towards Alface, in order to attempt new conquefts, to which the fuccefs that had hitherto attended his arms invited him<sup>1</sup>.

The negrciations between the Emperor and Maurice of no effect.

THE conference at Lintz did not produce any accommodation. Maurice, when he confented to it, feems to have had nothing in view but to amuse the Emperor; for he made such demands both in behalf of his confederates, and their ally the French King, as he knew would not be accepted by a Prince, too haughty to fubmit, at once, to conditions dictated by an enemy. But however firmly Maurice adhered during the negociation to the interests of his affociates, or how fteadily foever he kept in view the objects which had induced him to take arms, he often professed a strong inclination to terminate the differences with the Emperor in an amicable manner. Encouraged by this appearance of a pacifick disposition, Ferdinand propofed a fecond interview at Paffau on <sup>1</sup> Thuan. 349.

the

the twenty-fixth of May, and that a truce BOOK X. fhould commence on that day, and continue to the tenth of June, in order to give them leifure for adjusting all the points in dispute.

UPON this, Maurice rejoined his army on the ninth of May, which had now advanced to Gundelfingen. He put his troops in motion next morning; and as fixteen days yet remained for action before the commencement of the truce, he refolved, during that period, to venture upon an enterprize, the fuccefs of which would be fo decifive, as would render the negociations at Paffau extremely fhort, and entitle him to treat upon his own terms. He forefaw that the prospect of a ceffation of arms, which was to take place fo foon, together with the opinion of his earneftnefs to re-eftablish peace, with which he had artfully amufed Ferdinand, could hardly fail of infpiring the Emperor with fuch false hopes, that he would naturally become remifs, and relapfe into fome degree of that fecurity which had already been fo fatal to him. Relying on this conjecture, he marched directly at the head of his army towards Infpruck, and advanced with the most rapid motion that could be given to fo great a body of troops. On the eighteenth he arrived at Fiessen, a post of great consequence, at the entrance 77 1552.

Maurice advances towards Infpruck.

Воок X. 1552. entrance into the Tyrolefe. There he found a body of eight hundred men, whom the Emperor had affembled, ftrongly intrenched, in order to oppofe his progrefs. He attacked them inftantly with fuch violence and impetuofity that they abandoned their lines precipitantly, and falling back on a fecond body pofted near Ruten, communicated the panick terror with which they themfelves had been feized, to thofe troops, fo that they likewife took to flight, after a feeble refiftance.

Takes the caffle of Ehrenbergh.

ELATED with this fuccefs, which exceeded his most fanguine hopes, Maurice pressed forward to Ehrenbergh, a caftle fituated on an high and fteep precipice, which commanded the only pass through the mountains. As this fort had been furrendered to the Protestants at the beginning of the Smalkaldick war, because the garrifon was then too weak to defend it, the Emperor, fenfible of its importance, had taken care, at this juncture, to throw into it a body of troops fufficient to maintain it against the greatest army. But a shepherd, in pursuing a goat which had ftrayed from his flock, having difcovered an unknown path by which it was possible to afcend to the top of the rock, came with this feafonable piece of intelligence to Maurice. A fmall band of chosen foldiers, under the command of George

George of Mecklenburg, was inftantly ordered BOOK X. to follow this guide. They fet out in the evening, and clambering up the rugged track with infinite fatigue as well as danger, they reached the fummit unperceived; and at an hour which had been concerted, when Maurice began the affault on the one fide of the caftle, they appeared on the other, ready to fcale the walls, which were feeble in that place, becaufe it had been hitherto deemed inacceffible. The garrifon, ftruck with terror at the fight of an enemy on a quarter where they had thought themselves perfectly secure, immediately threw down their arms. Maurice, almost without bloodshed, and which was of greater confequence to him, without lofs of time, took poffeffion of a place, the reduction of which might have retarded him long, and have required the utmost efforts of his valour and skill".

MAURICE was now only two days march from A mutiny of Inspruck, and without losing a moment he retards his ordered his infantry to advance thither, having left his cavalry, which was unferviceable in that mountainous country, at Fieffen, to guard the mouth of the pass. He proposed to advance with fuch rapidity as to anticipate any accounts of the loss of Ehrenbergh, and to furprise the Emperor, together with his attendants, in an open

m Arnoldi vita Maurit. 123.

his troops march.

1552.

79

town

Воок X.

town incapable of defence. But juft as his troops began to move, a battalion of mercenaries mutinied, declaring that they would not flir until they had received the gratuity, which, according to the cuftom of that age, they claimed as the recompence due to them for having taken a place by affault. It was with great difficulty as well as danger, and not without fome confiderable lofs of time, that Maurice quieted this infurrection, and prevailed on the foldiers to follow him to a place where he promifed them fuch rich booty as would be an ample reward for all their fervices.

The Emperor flies in confusion from Infpruck.

To the delay, occafioned by this unforefeen accident, the Emperor owed his fafety. He was informed of the approaching danger late in the evening, and knowing that nothing could fave him but a fpeedy flight, he inftantly left Infpruck, without regarding the darkness of the night, or the violence of the rain which happened to fall at that time; and notwithftanding the debility occasioned by the gout, which rendered him unable to bear any motion but that of a litter, he travelled by the light of torches, taking his way over the Alps, by roads almost impassable. His courtiers and attendants followed him with equal precipitation, fome of them on fuch horfes as they could haftily procure.

procure, many of them on foot, and all in the Book X. utmost confusion. In this miserable plight, very unlike the pomp with which Charles had appeared during the five preceding years as the conqueror of Germany, he arrived at length with his dejected train at Villach in Carinthia, and fcarcely thought himfelf fecure even in that remote inacceffible corner.

MAURICE entered Inspruck a few hours after Mauriceenthe Emperor and his attendants had left it; and ters that town, enraged that the prey fhould escape out of his hands when he was just ready to feize it, he purfued them fome miles; but finding it impoffible to overtake perfons, to whom their fear gave fpeed, he returned to the town, and abandoned all the Emperor's baggage, together with that of his minifters, to be plundered by the foldiers; while he preferved untouched every thing belonging to the King of the Romans, either because he had formed some friendly connexion with that Prince, or becaufe he wilhed to have it believed that fuch a connexion fubfifted between them. As there now remained only three days to the commencement of the truce (with fuch nicety had Maurice calculated his operations), he fet out for Paffau, that he might meet Ferdinand on the day appointed.

VOL. IV.

BEFORE

1552.

BOOK X. 1552. The Emperor fets the Elector of Saxony at liberty.

82

BEFORE Charles left Infpruck, he withdrew the guards placed on the degraded Elector of Saxony, whom, during five years, he had carried about with him as a prifoner; and fet him entirely at liberty, either with an intention to embarrass Maurice by letting loofe a rival, who might difpute his title to his dominions and dignity, or from a fenfe of the indecency of detaining him a prifoner, while he himfelf run the rifk of being deprived of his own liberty. But that Prince, feeing no other way of efcaping than that which the Emperor took, and abhorring the thoughts of falling into the hands of a kinfman, whom he justly confidered as the author of all his misfortunes, chofe rather to accompany Charles in his flight, and to expect the final decifion of his fate from the treaty which was now approaching.

The council of Trent breaks up in great confternation. THESE were not the only effects which Maurice's operations produced. It was no fooner known at Trent that he had taken arms, than a general confernation feized the fathers of the council. The German prelates immediately returned home, that they might provide for the fafety of their refpective territories. The reft were extremely impatient to be gone; and the legate, who had hitherto difappointed all the endeavours vours of the Imperial ambaffadors to procure an audience in the council for the Proteftant divines, laid hold with joy on fuch a plaufible pretext for difmiffing an affembly, which he had found it fo difficult to govern. In a congregation held on the twenty-eighth of April, a decree was iffued proroguing the council during two years, and appointing it to meet at the expiration of that time, if peace were then reeftablifhed in Europe<sup>n</sup>. This prorogation, however, continued no lefs than ten years; and the proceedings of the council, when re-affembled in the year one thoufand five hundred and fixtytwo, fall not within the period prefcribed to this hiftory.

The convocation of this affembly had been paffionately defired by all the ftates and Princes in Chriftendom, who, from the wifdom as well as piety of prelates reprefenting the whole body of the faithful, expected fome charitable and efficacious endeavours towards composing the diffentions which unhappily had arifen in the church. But the feveral Popes by whofe authority it was called, had other objects in view. They exerted all their power or policy to attain thefe; and by the abilities as well as addrefs of their legates, by the ignorance of many of the prelates,

> <sup>n</sup> F. Paul, 353. G 2

The effect of its decrees. Boox X. 1552. prelates, and by the fervility of the indigent Italian bishops, acquired fuch influence in the council, that they dictated all its decrees, and framed them not with an intention to reftore unity and concord to the church, but to effablish their own dominion, or to confirm those tenets, upon which they imagined that dominion to be founded. Doctrines, which had hitherto been admitted upon the credit of tradition alone, and received with fome latitude of interpretation, were now defined with a fcrupulous nicety, and confirmed by the fanction of authority. Rites, which had formerly been observed only in deference to cuftom supposed to be ancient, were eftablished by the decrees of the church, and declared to be effential parts of its worship. The breach, inftead of being closed, was widened, and made irreparable. In place of any attempt to reconcile the contending parties, a line was drawn with fuch fludied accuracy, as afcertained and marked out the diffinction between them. This ftill ferves to keep them at a diftance; and, without fome fignal interpofition of Divine Providence, must render the feparation perpetual.

Character of the hiftorians of this council. OUR knowledge of the proceedings of this affembly, is derived from three different authors. Father Paul of Venice wrote his hiftory of the Council

Council of Trent, while the memory of what had Boox X. paffed there was recent, and fome who had been members of it were still alive. He has exposed the intrigues and artifices by which it was conducted, with a freedom and feverity which have given a deep wound to the credit of the council. He has defcribed its deliberations, and explained. its decrees, with fuch perfpicuity and depth of thought, with fuch various erudition and fuch force of reason, as have justly entitled his work to be placed among the most admired historical compositions. About half a century thereafter, the Jefuit Pallavicini published his history of the council, in opposition to that of Father Paul, and by employing all the force of an acute and refining genius to invalidate the credit, or to confute the reafonings of his antagonist, he labours to prove, by artful apologies for the proceedings of the council, and fubtile interpretations of its decrees, that it deliberated with impartiality, and decided with judgment as well as candour. Vargas, a Spanish doctor of laws, who was appointed to attend the Imperial ambaffadors at Trent, fent the bishop of Arras a regular account of the transactions there, explaining all the arts which the Legate employed to influence or over-awe the council. His letters have been published, in which he inveighs against the papal court with that asperity of cenfure, which was natural to a man whofe fitua-

G 3

85 1552.

tion

Еоок X. 1552. tion enabled him to obferve its arts thoroughly, and who was obliged to exert all his attention and talents in order to difappoint them. But whichfoever of thefe authors an intelligent perfon takes for his guide, in forming a judgment concerning the fpirit of the council, he must difcover fo much ambition as well as artifice among fome of the members, fo much ignorance and corruption among others; he must observe such a large infusion of human policy and passions, mingled with fuch a fcanty portion of that fimplicity of heart, fanctity of manners, and love of truth, which alone qualify men to determine what doctrines are worthy of God, and what worfhip is acceptable to him; that he will find it no easy matter to believe, that any extraordinary influence of the Holy Ghoft hovered over this affembly, and dictated its decrees.

The Freich endeavour to furprife Strafburgh; WHILE Maurice was employed in negociating with the King of the Romans at Lintz, or in making war on the Emperor in the Tyrol, the French King had advanced into Alface as far as Strafburgh; and having demanded leave of the Senate to march through the city, he hoped that, by repeating the fame fraud which he had practifed at Metz, he might render himfelf mafter of the place, and by that means fecure a paffage over the Rhine into the heart of Germany.

86

Germany. But the Strafburghers, inftructed and put on their guard by the credulity and misfortune of their neighbours, fhut their gates; and having affembled a garrifon of five thousand foldiers, repaired their fortifications, rafed the houfes in their fuburbs, and determined to defend themfelves to the utmost. At the fame time they fent a deputation of their most respectable citizens to the King, in order to divert him from making any hoftile attempt upon them. The Electors of Treves and Cologn, the Duke of Cleves, and other Princes in the neighbourhood, interposed in their behalf; befeeching Henry that he would not forget fo foon the title which he had generoufly affumed; and inftead of being the Deliverer of Germany, become its Oppreffor. The Swifs Cantons feconded them with zeal, foliciting Henry to fpare a city which had long been connected with their community in friendfhip and alliance.

POWERFUL as this united interceffion was, it but without would not have prevailed on Henry to forego a prize of fo much value, if he had been in a condition to have feized it. But, in that age, the method of fubfifting numerous armies at a diftance from the frontiers of their own country, was imperfectly underftood, and neither the revenues of Princes, nor their experience in the G4 art fucce's.

BOOK X. 1552.

87

BOOK X.

art of war, were equal to the great and complicated efforts which fuch an undertaking required. The French, though not far removed from their own country, began already to fuffer from fcarcity of provisions, and had no fufficient magazines collected to fupport them during a fiege, which must necessarily have been of great length°. At the fame time, the Queen of Hungary, governess of the Low-Countries, had affembled a confiderable body of troops, which, under the command of Martin de Roffem, laid wafte Champagne, and threatened the adjacent provinces of France. These concurring circumflances obliged the King, though with reluctance, to abandon the enterprize. But being willing to acquire fome merit with his allies, by this retreat which he could not avoid, he pretended to the Swifs that he had taken the refolution merely in compliance with their requeft "; and then, after giving orders that all the horfes in his army should be led to drink in the Rhine, as a proof of his having pushed his conquests for far, he marched back towards Champagne.

The operations of Albert of Brandenburg. WHILE the French King and the main army of the confederates were thus employed, Albert of Brandenburg was entrusted with the command of a separate body of eight thousand men, • Thuan. 351, 352, tom. vii. 39, P Sleid. 157. Brantome, confifting

confifting chiefly of mercenaries who had re- BOOK X. forted to his standard, rather from the hope of plunder, than the expectation of regular pay. That Prince, feeing himfelf at the head of fuch a number of desperate adventurers, ready to follow wherever he should lead them, foon began to difdain a ftate of fubordination, and to form fuch vaft fchemes of aggrandizing himfelf, as feldom occur, even to ambitious minds, unlefs when civil war or violent factions roufe them to bold exertions, by alluring them with immediate hopes of fuccels. Full of these aspiring thoughts, Albert made war in a manner very different from the other confederates. He endeavoured to fpread the terror of his arms by the rapidity of his motions, as well as the extent and rigour of his devastations; he exacted contributions wherever he came, in order to amass such a sum of money, as would put it in his power to keep his army together; he laboured to get poffeffion of Nuremberg, Ulm, or fome other of the free cities in Upper Germany, in which, as a capital, he might fix the feat of his power. But, finding thefe cities on their guard, and in a condition to refift his attacks, he turned all his rage against the popish ecclesiafticks, whofe territories he plundered with fuch wanton and mercilefs barbarity, as gave them a very unfavourable impression of the 1552.

89

Воок X. 1552.

9,0

the fpirit of that reformation in religion, with zeal for which he pretended to be animated. The bifhops of Bambergh and Wurzburgh, by their fituation, lay particularly exposed to his ravages; he obliged the former to transfer to him, in property, almost one half of his extenfive diocefe; and compelled the latter to advance an immense sum in order to fave his country from ruin and defolation. During all those wild fallies, Albert paid no regard either to Maurice's orders, whofe commands as Generaliffimo of the league he had engaged to obey, or to the remonstrances of the other confederates; and manifelly difcovered, that he attended only to his own private emolument, without any folicitude about the common caufe, or the general objects which had induced them to take arms 9.

The negociations of proce at Paffau. MAURICE having ordered his army to march back into Bavaria, and having published a proclamation enjoining the Lutheran clergy and instructors of youth, to refume the exercise of their functions in all the cities, schools, and universities from which they had been ejected, met Ferdinand at Passau on the twenty-fixth day of May. As matters of the greatest consequence to the future peace and independence of the s Sleid. 561. Thuan. 357.

Empire

Empire were to be fettled in this congrefs, the eyes of all Germany were fixed upon it. Befides Ferdinand and the Imperial ambaffadors, the Duke of Bavaria, the bifhops of Saltzburgh and Aichftadt, the minifters of all the Electors, together with deputies from moft of the confiderable Princes and free cities, reforted to Paffau. Maurice, in name of his affociates, and the King of the Romans as the Emperor's reprefentative, opened the negociation. The Princes who were prefent, together with the deputies of fuch as were abfent, acted as interceffors or mediators between them.

MAURICE, in a long difcourse, explained the motives of his own conduct. After having enumerated all the unconftitutional and oppreffive acts of the Emperor's administration, he, agreeably to the manifesto which he had published when he took arms against him, limited his demands to three articles. That the Landgrave of Heffe fhould be immediately fet at liberty; That the grievances in the civil government of the Empire should be redreffed; and that the Protestants should be allowed the publick exercife of their religion without moleftation. Ferdinand and the Imperial ambaffadors difcovering their unwillingness to gratify him with regard to all these points, the mediators wrote a joint letter 10

91 Воок X. 1552.

The terms which Maurice propofed.

EOOK X. 1552. to the Emperor, befeeching him to deliver Germany from the calamities of a civil war, by giving fuch fatisfaction to Maurice and his party as might induce them to lay down their arms; and at the fame time they prevailed upon Maurice to grant a prolongation of the truce for a fhort time, during which they undertook to procure the Emperor's final anfwer to his demands.

Powerfully fupported by the Princes of the Empire,

This request was prefented to the Emperor in the name of all the Princes of the Empire, Popifh as well as Protestant, in the name of fuch as had lent an helping hand to forward his ambitious fchemes, as well as of those who had viewed the progrefs of his power with jealoufy and dread. The uncommon and cordial unanimity with which they concurred at this juncture in enforcing Maurice's demands, and in recommending peace, flowed from different caufes. Such as were most attached to the Roman catholick church could not help obferving, that the Protestant confederates were at the head of a numerous army, while the Emperor was but just beginning to provide for his own defence. They forefaw that great efforts would be required of them, and would be necessary on their part, in order to cope with enemies, who had been allowed to get the ftart fo far, and to attain fuch formidable power. Experience had taught them, them, that the fruit of all these efforts would be BOOK X. reaped by the Emperor alone, and the more complete any victory proved which they should gain, the fafter would they bind their own fetters, and render them the more intolerable. These reflections made them cautious how they contributed a fecond time, by their indifcreet zeal, to put the Emperor in poffeffion of power which would be fatal to the liberties of their country. Notwithstanding the implacable fiercenefs of the fpirit of bigotry in that age, they chofe rather that the Protestants should acquire that fecurity for their religion which they demanded, than by affifting Charles to opprefs them, to give fuch additional force to the Imperial prerogative, as would overturn the conftitution of the Empire. To all these confiderations, the dread of feeing Germany laid wafte by a civil war, added new force. Many states of the Empire already felt the deftructive rage of Albert's arms, others dreaded it, and all wished for an accommodation between the Emperor and Maurice, which they hoped would fave them from that cruel fcourge.

92

SUCH were the reafons that induced fo many Princes, notwithstanding the variety of their political interefts, and the opposition in their religious fentiments, to unite in recommending to the Emperor an accommodation with Maurice, Themotives which influenced the Emperor at this juncture.

93

1552.

not

94

1552.

BOOK X. not only as a falutary, but as a neceffary meafure. The motives which prompted Charles to defire it, were not fewer or of lefs weight. He was perfectly fenfible of the fuperiority which the confederates had acquired through his own negligence; and he now felt the infufficiency of his own refources to oppose them. His Spanish subjects, difgusted at his long abfence, and weary of endless wars, which were of no benefit to their country, refused to furnish him any confiderable fupply either of men or money; and although by his addrefs or importunity he might have hoped to draw from them at last more effectual aid; that, he knew, was too diftant to be of any fervice in the prefent exigency of his affairs. His treafury was drained; his veteran forces were difperfed, or difbanded, and he could not depend much either on the fidelity or courage of the new levied foldiers whom he was collecting. There was no hope of repeating with fuccels the fame artifices which had weakened and ruined the Smalkaldick league. As the end at which he aimed was now known, he could no longer employ the fpecious pretexts, which had formerly concealed his ambitious defigns. Every Prince in Germany was alarmed and on his guard; and it was vain to think of blinding them a fecond time to fuch a degree, as to make one part of them instruments to enflave the other. The fpirit of a con-confederacy, whereof Maurice was the head, experience had taught him, to be very different from that of the league of Smalkalde; and from what he had already felt, he had no reason to flatter himfelf that its counfels would be as irrefolute, or its efforts as timid and feeble. IF he fhould refolve on continuing the war, he might be affured, that the most confiderable states in Germany would take part in it against him; and a dubious neutrality was the utmoft he could expect from the reft. While the confederates found full employment for his arms in one quarter, the King of France would feize the favourable opportunity, and pufh on his operations in another, with almost certain fuccefs. That monarch had already made conquests in the Empire, which he was no lefs eager to recover, than impatient to be revenged on him for aiding his malecontent fubjects. Though Henry had now retired from the banks of the Rhine, he had only varied the fcene of hoftilities, having invaded the Low-Countries with all his forces. The Turks, roufed by the folicitations of the French King, as well as ftimulated by refentment against Ferdinand for having violated the truce in Hungary, had prepared a powerful fleet to ravage the coafts of Naples and Sicily, which he had left almost defencelefs, by calling thence the greatest part of the regular troops

95 Воок X. 1552.

Воок X. 1552.

96

Ferdinand zealous to promote an accommodation. troops to join the army which he was now affembling.

FERDINAND, who went in perfon to Villach, in order to lay before the Emperor the refult of the conferences at Paffau, had likewife reafons peculiar to himfelf for defiring an accommodation. These prompted him to second, with the greatest earnestness, the arguments which the Princes affembled there had employed in recommending it. He had observed, not without fecret fatisfaction, the fatal blow that had been given to the defpotick power, which his brother had usurped in the Empire. He was extremely folicitous to prevent Charles from recovering what he had loft, as he forefaw that he would immediately refume with fresh eagernefs, and with a better chance of fuccefs, his favourite scheme of transmitting that power to his fon by excluding him from the right of fucceffion to the Imperial throne. On this account, he was willing to contribute towards circumfcribing the Imperial authority, in order to render his own possession of it certain. Befides, Solyman, exafperated at the loss of Tranfylvania, and still more at the fraudulent arts by which it had been feized, had ordered into the field an army of an hundred thousand men, which having defeated a great body of Ferdinand's nand's troops, and taken feveral places of importance, threatened not only to complete the conquest of the province, but to drive him out of that part of Hungary which was still subject to his jurifdiction. He was unable to refift fuch a mighty enemy; his brother, while engaged in a domeftick war, could afford him no aid; and he could not even hope to draw from Germany the contingent, either of troops or money, ufually furnished to repel the invasions of the Infidels. Maurice, having observed Ferdinand's perplexity with regard to this last point, had offered, if peace were re-established on a fecure foundation, that he would march in perfon with his troops into Hungary against the Turks. Such was the effect of this well-timed propofal, that Ferdinand, deftitute of every other prospect of relief, became the most zealous advocate whom the confederates could have chosen to urge their claims, and there was hardly any thing that they could have demanded which he would not have chosen to grant, rather than have retarded a pacification, to which he trufted as the only means of faving his Hungarian crown.

WHEN fo many caufes confpired in rendering Circumstanan accommodation eligible, it might have been retard it. expected that it would have taken place immediately. But the inflexibility of the Emperor's VOL. IV. H temper, ces which

BOOK X. 1552.

97

Воок X.

98

temper, together with his unwillingnefs at once to relinquish objects which he had long purfued with fuch earneftnefs and affiduity, counterbalanced, for fome time, the force of all the motives which difpofed him to peace, and not only put that event at a diftance, but feemed to render it uncertain. When Maurice's demands, together with the letter of the mediators at Paffau, were prefented to him, he peremptorily refused to redrefs the grievances which were pointed out, nor would he agree to any stipulation for the immediate fecurity of the Protestant religion, but proposed referring both these to the determination of a future diet. On his part, he required that inftant reparation fhould be made to all who, during the prefent war, had fuffered either by the licentiousness of the confederate troops, or the exactions of their leaders.

Maurice's vigorous operations facilitate it. MAURICE, who was well acquainted with the Emperor's arts, immediately concluded that he had nothing in view by thefe overtures but to amufe and deceive ; and therefore, without liftening to Ferdinand's intreaties, he left Paffau abruptly, and joining his troops which were encamped at Mergentheim, a city in Franconia, belonging to the knights of the Teutonick order, he put them in motion, and renewed hoftilities. As three thoufand men in the Emperor's pay had had thrown themfelves into Frankfort on the Maine, and might from thence infeft the neighbouring country of Heffe, he marched towards that city and laid fiege to it in form. The brifkness of this enterprize, and the vigour with which Maurice carried on his approaches againft the town, gave fuch an alarm to the Emperor, as disposed him to lend a more favourable ear to Ferdinand's arguments in behalf of an accommodation. Firm and haughty as his nature was, he found it neceffary to bend, and fignified his willingness to make concessions on his part, if Maurice, in return, would abate fomewhat of the rigour of his demands. Ferdinand, as foon as he perceived that his brother began to yield, did not defift from his importunities; until he prevailed on him to declare what was the utmost that he would grant for the fecurity of the confederates. Having gained this difficult point, he inftantly difpatched a meffenger to Maurice's camp, and imparting to him the Emperor's final refolution, conjured him not to frustrate his endeavours for the re-establishment of peace; or, by an unfeafonable obftinacy on his fide, to difappoint the wifhes of all Germany for that falutary event.

MAURICE, notwithstanding the prosperous fituation of his affairs, was strongly inclined to listen to his advice. The Emperor, though Maurice defirous of an accommedation.

99

BOOK X.

1552.

July 17:

over-

Воок Х.

over-reached and furprifed, had now begun to affemble troops, and however flow his motions might be, while the first effects of his consternation remained, he was fenfible that Charles must at last act with vigour proportional to the extent of his power and territories, and lead into Germany an army formidable by its numbers, and still more by the terror of his name, as well as the remembrance of his past victories. He could fearcely hope that a confederacy compofed of fo many members would continue to operate with fufficient union and perfeverance to refift the confiftent and well-directed efforts of an army, at the abfolute difpofal of a leader accustomed to command and to conquer. He felt already, although he had not hitherto experienced the shock of any adverse event, that he was the head of a disjointed body. He faw, from the example of Albert of Brandenburg, how difficult it would be, with all his addrefs and credit, to prevent any particular member from detaching himfelf from the whole, and how impoffible to recal him to his proper rank and fubordination. This filled him with apprehenfions for the common caufe. Another confideration gave him no lefs difquiet with regard to his own particular interefts. By fetting at liberty the degraded Elector, and by repealing the act depriving him of his hereditary honours and and dominions, the Emperor had it in his power to wound him in the most fensible part. The efforts of a Prince beloved by his ancient fubjects, and revered by all the Protestant party, in order to recover what had been unjuftly taken from him, could hardly have failed of exciting commotions in Saxony, which would endanger all that he had acquired at the expence of fo much diffimulation and artifice. It was no lefs in the Emperor's power to render vain all the folicitations of the confederates in behalf of the Landgrave. He had only to add one act of violence more to the injuffice and rigour with which he had already treated him; and he had accordingly threatened the fons of that unfortunate Prince, that if they perfifted in their prefent enterprize, instead of seeing their father reftored to liberty, they fhould hear of his having fuffered the punishment which his rebellion had merited .

HAVING deliberated upon all these points with his affociates, Maurice thought it more prudent to accept of the conditions offered, though less advantageous than those which he had proposed, than again to commit all to the doubtful issue of war<sup>s</sup>. He repaired forthwith

 $H_3$

The peace of Religion concluded at Paffay.

<sup>r</sup> Sleid. 571. lib. x. 359, &c. * Sleid. Hift. 563, &c. Thuan.

.....

to 1552.

102

Воок X. 1552. Aug. 2.

THE REIGN OF THE

to Paffau, and figned the treaty of peace; of which the chief articles were, That before the twelfth day of August, the confederates shall lay down their arms, and difband their forces; That on or before that day the Landgrave shall be fet at liberty, and conveyed in fafety to his caftle of Rheinfels; That a diet shall be held within fix months, in order to deliberate concerning the most proper and effectual method of preventing for the future all difputes and diffenfions about religion; That, in the mean time, neither the Emperor, nor any other Prince, shall, upon any pretext whatever, offer any injury or violence to fuch as adhered to the confession of Augsburg, but allow them to enjoy the free and undifturbed exercise of their religion; That in return, the Protestants shall not molest the Catholicks either in the exercise of their ecclefiaftical jurifdiction, or in performing their religious ceremonies; That the Imperial chamber shall administer justice impartially to perfons of both parties, and Protestants be admitted indifcriminately with the Catholicks to fit as judges in that court; That if the next diet should not be able to terminate the difputes with regard to religion, the flipulations in the prefent treaty in behalf of the Protestants, shall continue for ever in full force and vigour; That none of the confederates shall be liable to any action on account of what had happened during the course of the BOOK X. war; That the confideration of those encroachments which had been made, as Maurice pretended, upon the conflitution and liberties of the Empire, shall be remitted to the approaching diet; That Albert of Brandenburg (hall be comprehended in the treaty, provided he shall accede to it, and difband his forces before the twelfth of August '.

3

of

SUCH was the memorable treaty of Paffau, that overturned the vaft fabrick, in erecting which Charles had employed fo many years, and had exerted the utmost efforts of his power and policy; that annulled all his regulations with regard to religion; defeated all his hopes of rendering the Imperial authority abfolute and hereditary in his family; and established the Protestant church, which had hitherto fubfisted precarioufly in Germany, through connivance, or by expedients, upon a firm and fecure bafis. Maurice reaped all the glory of having concerted and completed this unexpected revolution. It is a fingular circumftance, that the Reformation should be indebted for its fecurity and full establishment in Germany, to the same hand which had formerly brought it to the brink of destruction, and that both events should have 1552.

t Recueil des Traitez, ii. 261.

Reflections upon this peace and upon the conduct of Maurice.

Воок Х.

1552.

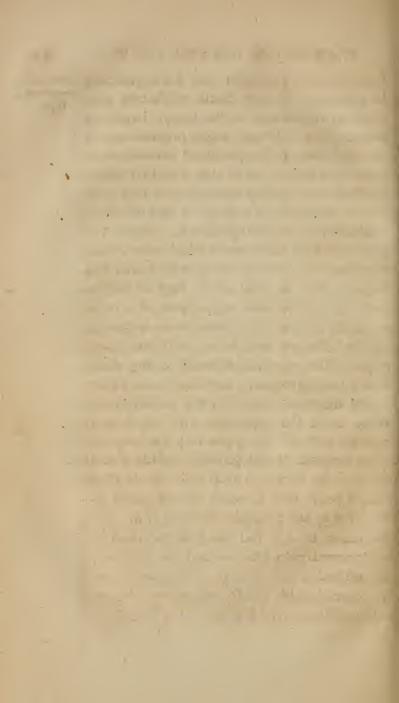

have been accomplifhed by the fame arts of diffimulation. The ends, however, which Maurice had in view, at those different junctures, feem to have been more attended to than the means by which he attained them; and he was now as univerfally extolled for his zeal and publick fpirit, as he had lately been condemned for his indifference and interested policy. It is no lefs worthy of obfervation, that the French King, a monarch zealous for the Catholick faith, should employ his power in order to protect and maintain the Reformation in the Empire, at the very time when he was perfecuting his own Protestant fubjects with all the fierceness of bigotry, and that the league for this purpofe, which proved fo fatal to the Romifh church, should be negociated and figned by a Roman Catholick bifhop. So wonderfully doth the wifdom of God fuperintend and regulate the caprice of human paffions, and render them fubfervient towards the accomplishment of his own purpoles.

Little attention paid to the French King in this treaty. LITTLE attention was paid to the interefts of the French King during the negociations at Paffau. Maurice and his affociates, having gained what they had in view, difcovered no great folicitude about an ally, whom, perhaps, they reckoned to be overpaid for the affiftance which which he had given them, by his acquisitions in Lorrain. A fhort claufe which they procured to be inferted in the treaty, importing that the King of France might communicate to the confederates his particular pretenfions or caufes of hoftility, which they would lay before the Emperor, was the only fign that they gave of their remembering how much they had been indebted to him for their fuccefs. Henry experienced the fame treatment, which every Prince who lends his aid to the authors of a civil war may expect. As foon as the rage of faction began to fublide, and any profpect of accommodation to open, his fervices were forgotten, and his affociates made a merit with their fovereign, of the ingratitude with which they abandoned their protector. But how much foever Henry might be enraged at the perfidy of his allies, or at the impatience with which they hastened to make their peace with the Emperor at his expence, he was perfectly fenfible that it was more his intereft to keep well with the Germanick body, than to refent the indignities offered him by any particular members of it. For that reafon he difniffed the hoftages which he had received from Maurice and his affociates, and affected to talk in the fame ftrain as formerly, concerning his zeal for maintaining the ancient conftitution and liberties of the Empire.

105

Воок Х.

THE # HISTORY

OFTHE

REIGN

OF THE

EMPEROR CHARLES V.

BOOK XI.

A S foon as the treaty of Paffau was figned, Maurice, in confequence of his engagements with Ferdinand, marched into Hungary at the head of twenty thoufand men. But the vaft fuperiority of the Turkifh armies, the frequent mutinies both of the Spanifh and German foldiers, occafioned by their want of pay, together with the diffenfions between Maurice and Caftaldo, who was piqued at being obliged to refign the chief command to him, prevented his performing any thing in that country fuitable to his

BOOK XI.

1552. Aug. 3. Maurice marches into Hungary againft the Turks.

BOOK XI. his former fame, or of great benefit to the King of the Romans<sup>a</sup>.

The Landgrave of Heffe recovers his liberty.

WHEN Maurice fet out for Hungary, the Prince of Heffe parted from him with the forces under his command, and marched back into his own country, that he might be ready to receive his father upon his return, and give up to him the reins of government which he had held during his absence. But fortune was not yet weary of perfecuting the Landgrave. A battalion of mercenary troops, which had been in the pay of Heffe, being feduced by Reifenberg their colonel, a foldier of fortune, ready to engage in any enterprize, fecretly withdrew from the young Prince as he was marching homewards, and joined Albert of Brandenburg, who still continued in arms against the Emperor, refusing to be included in the treaty of Paffau. Unhappily for the Landgrave, an account of this reached the Netherlands, just as he was difmiffed from the citadel of Mechlin where he had been confined, but before he had got beyond the frontiers of that country. The Queen of Hungary, who governed there in her brother's name, incenfed at fuch an open violation of the treaty to which he owed his_liberty, commanded him to be arrested,

* Istuanhaffii Hift. Hungar. 288. Thuan, lib. x. 371.

108

arrefted, and committed him again to the cuftody BOOK XI. of the fame Spanish captain who had guarded him for five years with fuch fevere vigilance. Philip beheld all the horrors of his imprisonment renewed, and his fpirits fubfiding in the fame proportion as they had rifen during the fhort interval in which he had enjoyed liberty; he funk into defpair, and believed himfelf to be doomed to perpetual captivity. But the matter being explained to the Emperor's full fatisfaction, that the revolt of Reifenberg's mercenaries could be imputed neither to the Landgrave nor to his fon, he gave orders for his releafe; and Philip at laft obtained the liberty for which he had fo long languished b. But though he recovered his freedom, and was reinstated in his dominions, his fufferings feem to have broken the vigour, and to have extinguished the activity of his mind : From being the boldeft as well as most enterprising Prince in the Empire, he became the most timid and cautious, and passed the remainder of his days in a pacifick indolence.

THE degraded Elector of Saxony, likewife, Likewife procured his liberty in confequence of the treaty of Saxony, of Paffau. The Emperor having been obliged to relinquish all his schemes for extirpating the Protestant religion, had no longer any motive

<sup>b</sup> Sleid. 573. Belcarii Comment. 834.

the Elector

1552.

109

for 012

BOOK XI.

1;52.

for detaining him a prifoner; and being extremely folicitous, at that juncture, to recover the confidence and good-will of the Germans, whole affiftance was effential to the fuccels of the enterprize which he meditated against the King of France, he, among other expedients for that purpole, thought of releasing from imprifonment a Prince whofe merit entitled him no lefs to efteem, than his fufferings rendered him the object of compassion. John Frederick took poffeffion accordingly of that part of his territories which had been referved for him, when Maurice was invefted with the Electoral dignity. As in this fituation, he continued to difplay the fame virtuous magnanimity for which he had been confpicuous in a more prosperous and splendid ftate, and which he had retained amidft all his fufferings, he lived feveral years in that high reputation to which he had fo just a title.

The Emperor refolves to make war upon France. THE lofs of Metz, Toul, and Verdun, had made a deep imprefion on the Emperor. Accuftomed to terminate all his operations againft France with advantage to himfelf, he thought that it nearly concerned his honour not to allow Henry the fuperiority in this war, or to fuffer his own administration to be flained with the infamy of having permitted territories of fuch confequence to be difmembered from the Empire.

IIO

pire. This was no lefs a point of intereft than BOOK XI. of honour. As the frontier of Champagne was more naked, and lay more exposed than that of any province in France, he had frequently, during his wars with that kingdom, made inroads upon it with great fuccefs and effect; but if Henry were allowed to retain his late conquefts, France would gain fuch a formidable barrier on that fide, as to be altogether fecure, where formerly she had been weakest. On the other hand, the Empire had now loft as much, in point of fecurity, as France had 'acquired; and being ftripped of the defence which those cities afforded it, lay open to be invaded on a quarter, where all the towns having been hitherto confidered as interior, and remote from any enemy, were but flightly fortified. These confiderations determined Charles to attempt recovering the three towns of which Henry had made himfelf mafter; and the preparations which he had made against Maurice and his affociates, enabled him to carry his refolution into immediate execution.

As foon, then, as the peace was concluded at Hisprepara-Paffau, he left his inglorious retreat at Villach, this purpofe. and advanced to Augfburg, at the head of a confiderable body of Germans which he had levied, together with all the troops which he had drawn

tions for

III

1552.

112

Eook XI.

1552.

drawn out of Italy and Spain. To thefe he added feveral battalions, which having been in the pay of the confederates, entered into his fervice when difmiffed by them; and he prevailed likewife on fome Princes of the Empire' to join him with their vaffals. In order to conceal the deftination of this formidable army, and to guard against alarming the French fo as to put them on preparing for their defence, he gave out that he was to march forthwith into Hungary, in order to fecond Maurice in his operations against the Infidels. When he began to advance towards the Rhine, and could no longer employ that pretext, he tried a new artifice, and fpread a report, that he took this route in order to chaftife Albert of Brandenburg, whofe cruel exactions in that part of the Empire called loudly for his interpolition to check them.

The precautions of the French for the defence of Metz. But the French having grown acquainted, at laft, with arts by which they had been fo often deceived, viewed all Charles's motions with diftruft. Henry immediately difcerned the true object of his vaft preparations, and refolved to defend the important conquefts which he had gained with vigour equal to that with which they were about to be attacked. As he forefaw that the whole weight of the war would be turned againft against Metz, by whose fate that of Toul and Verdun would be determined, he nominated Francis of Lorrain, Duke of Guife, to take the command in that city during the fiege, the iffue of which would equally affect the honour and interest of his country. His choice could not have fallen upon any perfon more worthy of that truft. The Duke of Guise possessed, in a high degree, all the talents of courage, fagacity, and prefence of mind, which render men eminent in military command. He was largely endowed with that magnanimity of foul which delights in bold enterprizes, and afpires to fame by fplendid and extraordinary actions. He repaired with joy to the dangerous flation affigned him, as to a theatre on which he might difplay his great qualities under the immediate eye of his countrymen, all ready to applaud him. The martial genius of the French nobility in that age, which confidered it as the greatest reproach to remain inactive, when there was any opportunity of fignalizing their courage, prompted great numbers to follow a leader who was the darling as well as the pattern of every one that courted military fame. Several Princes of the blood, many noblemen of the higheft rank, and all the young officers who could obtain the King's permiffion, entered Metz as volunteers. By their prefence they added spirit to the garrifon, and VOL. IV. enabled T

113

BOOK XI.

1552. The Duke of Guife ap pointed go vernor o f the town.

114

Воок XI. 1552. enabled the Duke of Guife to employ, on every emergency, perfons eager to diftinguish themfelves, and fit to conduct any fervice.

Prepares for a vigorous defence.

But with whatever alacrity the Duke of Guife undertook the defence of Metz, he found every thing, upon his arrival there, in fuch a fituation, as might have induced any perfon of lefs intrepid courage to defpair of defending it with fuccefs. The city was of great extent, with large fuburbs; the walls were in many places feeble and without ramparts; the ditch narrow; and the old towers, which projected inftead of baftions, were at too great diftance from each other to defend the space between them. For all these defects he endeavoured to provide the best remedy, which the time would permit. He ordered the fuburbs, without fparing the monasteries or churches, not even that of St. Arnulph, in which feveral Kings of France had been buried, to be levelled with the ground; but in order to guard against the imputation of impiety, to which fuch a violation of fo many facred edifices, as well as of the ashes of the dead might expose him, he executed this with much religious ceremony. Having ordered all the holy vestments and utenfils, together with the bones of the Kings, and other perfons deposited in these churches, to be removed, they were carried in folemn procession to a church within the walls, he himfelf walking before before them uncovered, with a torch in his hand. He then pulled down fuch houses as stood near the walls, cleared and enlarged the ditch, repaired the ruinous fortifications, and erected new ones. As it was neceffary that all these works should be finished with the utmost expedition, he laboured at them with his own hands : the officers and volunteers imitated his example, and the foldiers fubmitted with cheerfulnefs to the most fevere fatigues, when they faw that their fuperiors did not decline to bear a part in these together with them. At the fame time he compelled all useless perfons to leave the place; he filled the magazines with provisions and military ftores; burnt the mills, and deftroyed the corn and forage for feveral miles round the town. Such were his popular talents, as well as his arts, of acquiring an alcendant over the minds of men, that the citizens feconded him with no lefs ardour than the foldiers; and every other paffion being fwallowed up in the zeal to repulse the enemy, with which he inspired them, they beheld the ruin of their estates, together with the havock which he made among their publick and private buildings, without any emotion of refentment<sup>c</sup>.

MEANTIME the Emperor, having collected Charles adall his forces, continued his march towards wards Metz.

vances to-

Metz.

115

BOOK XI. 1552.

° Thuan. xi. 287.

<sup>12</sup>

116

BOOK XI.

Metz. As he paffed through the cities on the Rhine, he faw the difmal effects of that licentious and wafteful war which Albert had carried on in thefe parts. Upon his approach, that Prince, though at the head of twenty thoufand men, withdrew into Lorrain as if he had intended to join the French King, whofe arms he had quartered with his own in all his ftandards and enfigns. Albert was not in a condition to cope with the Imperial troops <sup>d</sup>, which amounted at leaft to fixty thoufand men, forming one of the moft numerous and beft appointed armies which had been brought into the field during that age, in any of the wars among Chriftian Princes.

Invefis the towns.

THE chief command, under the Emperor, was committed to the Duke of Alva, affifted by the Marquis de Marignano, together with the moft experienced of the Italian and Spanish generals. As it was towards the end of October, these intelligent officers represented the great danger of beginning, at such an advanced season, a season of beginning, at such an advanced season, a fiege which could not fail to prove very tedious. But Charles adhered to his own opinion with his usual obstinacy, and being confident that he had made such preparations, and taken such precautions, as would ensure success, he ordered d Natal. Comitis, Hift. 127.

the city to be invefted. As foon as the Duke of Alva appeared, a large body of the French fallied out and attacked his van-guard with great vigour, put it in confusion, and killed or took prifoners a confiderable number of men. By this early fpecimen which they gave of the conduct of their officers, as well as the valour of their troops, they shewed the Imperialists what an enemy they had to encounter, and how dear every advantage must cost them. The place, however, was completely invefted, the trenches were opened, and the other works begun.

THE attention both of the befiegers and be- Both parties fieged was turned for fome time towards Albert of Brandenburg, and they ftrove with emulation which fhould gain that Prince, who ftill hovered in the neighbourhood, fluctuating in all the uncertainty of irrefolution, natural to a man, who, being fwayed by no principle, was allured different ways by contrary views of intereft. The French tempted him with offers extremely beneficial; the Imperialifts fcrupled at no promife which they thought would make an impression upon him. After much hesitation he was gained by the Emperor, from whom he expected to receive advantages, which were both more immediate and more permanent. As the French King, who began to fuspect his intentions.

endeavour to gain Albert of Brandenburg.

Oct. 19.

118

Воок XI. 1552.

Nov. 4.

tentions, had appointed a body of troops underthe Duke of Aumale, brother to the Duke of Guife, to watch his motions, Albert fell upon them unexpectedly with fuch vigour that he routed them entirely, killed many of the officers, wounded Aumale himfelf, and took him prifoner. Immediately after this victory, he marched in triumph to Metz, and joined his army to that of the Emperor. Charles, in reward for this fervice, and the great acceffion of ftrength which he brought him, granted Albert a formal pardon of all paft offences, and confirmed him in the poffeffion of the territories which he had violently ufurped during the war °.

The gallant behaviour of the Duke of Guife and his gartifon. THE Duke of Guife, though deeply affected with his brother's misfortune, did not remit, in any degree, the vigour with which he defended the town. He haraffed the befiegers by frequent fallies, in which his officers were fo eager to diftinguifh themfelves, that his authority being hardly fufficient to reftrain the impetuofity of their courage, he was obliged at different times to fhut the gates, and to conceal the keys, in order to prevent the Princes of the blood, and noblemen of the firft rank, from expofing themfelves to danger in every fally. He repaired in the night what the enemy's artillery had beat down during the day, or e Sleid. 575. Thuan. lib. xi. 389. 392.

erected

erected behind the ruined works new fortifica- BOOK XI. tions of almost equal strength. The Imperialists, on their part, pushed on the attack with great spirit, and carried forward, at once, approaches against different parts of the town. But the art of attacking fortified places was not then arrived at that degree of perfection to which it was carried towards the close of the fixteenth century, during the long war in the Netherlands. The befiegers, after the unwearied labour of many weeks, found that they had made but little progrefs; and although their batteries had made breaches in different places, they faw, to their aftonishment, works fuddenly appear, in demolishing which their fatigues and dangers would be renewed. The Emperor, enraged at the obftinate refiftance which his army met with, left Thionville, where he had been confined by a violent fit of the gout, and though ftill fo infirm that he was obliged to be carried in a litter, he repaired to Nov. 26. the camp; that by his prefence he might animate the foldiers, and urge on the attack with greater spirit. Upon his arrival new batteries were erected, and new efforts were made with redoubled ardour.

BUT, by this time, the winter had fet in with The diffrefs great rigour; the camp was alternately deluged perial army. with rain or covered with fnow; at the fame of the Im-

time

1552.

119

120

BOOK XI.

1552.

time provisions were become extremely scarce, as a body of French cavalry which hovered in the neighbourhood, often interrupted the convoys, or rendered their arrival difficult and uncertain. Difeafes began to fpread among the foldiers, efpecially among the Italians and Spaniards, unaccustomed to fuch inclement weather; great numbers were difabled from ferving, and many died. At length, fuch breaches were made as feemed practicable, and Charles refolved to hazard a general affault, in fpite of all the remonstrances of his generals concerning the imprudence of attacking a numerous garrifon, conducted and animated by the moft gallant of the French nobility, with an army weakened by difeafes, and difheartened with ill fuccefs. The Duke of Guife, fufpecting the Emperor's intentions from the extraordinary hurry which he observed in the enemy's camp, ordered all his troops to their respective posts. They appeared immediately on the walls, and behind the breaches, with fuch a determined countenance, fo eager for the combat, and fo well prepared to give the affailants a warm reception, that the Imperialists, instead of advancing to the charge when the word of command was given, stood motionless, in a timid dejected filence. The Emperor, perceiving that he could not truft troops whole spirits were fo much broken, retired abruptly to his quarters, complaining plaining that he was now deferted by his fol. BOOK XI. diers, who deferved no longer the name of men<sup>f</sup>.

DEEPLY as this behaviour of his troops mortified and affected Charles, he would not hear of abandoning the fiege, though he faw the neceffity of changing the method of attack. He fuspended the fury of his batteries, and propofed to proceed by the more fecure but tedious method of fapping. But as it still continued to rain or to fnow almost inceffantly, fuch as were employed in this fervice endured incredible hardfhips: and the Duke of Guife, whofe industry was not inferior to his valour, discovering all their mines, counterworked them, and prevented their effect. At last, Charles finding it impoffible to contend any longer with the rigour of the feafon, and with enemies whom he could neither overpower by force, nor fubdue by art, while at the fame time a contagious diftemper raged among his troops, and cut off daily great numbers of the officers as well as foldiers, yielded to the folicitations of his generals, who conjured him to fave the remains of his army by a timely retreat; "Fortune," fays he, " I now perceive, refembles other females, and choofes to confer her favours on young men, while fhe forfakes those who are advanced in years."

f Thuan. 397-

UPON

1552.

The Emperor changes the method of attack.

121

122 Воок XI.

THE REIGN OF THE

I552. Dec. 26. Obliged to raife the fiege.

Ruin of the Imperial army, and humanity of the French.

UPON this, he gave orders immediately to raife the fiege, and fubmitted to the difgrace of abandoning the enterprife, after having continued fifty-fix days before the town, during which time he had loft upwards of thirty thoufand men, who died of difeafes, or were killed by the enemy. The Duke of Guife, as foon as he perceived the intention of the Imperialifts, took measures to prevent their retiring unmolefted, and fent out feveral bodies both of cavalry and infantry to infeft their rear, to pick up stragglers, and to feize every opportunity of attacking them with advantage. Such was the confusion with which they made their retreat, that the French might have annoyed them in the most cruel manner. But when they fallied out, a spectacle presented itself to their view, which extinguished at once all hoftile rage, and melted them into tenderness and compassion. The Imperial camp was filled with the fick and wounded, with the dead and the dying. In all the different roads by which the army retired, numbers were found, who, having made an effort to escape, beyond their strength, were left, when they could go no farther, to perifh without affiftance. This they received from their enemies, and were indebted to them for all the kind offices which their friends had not the power to perform. The Duke of Guife immediately diately ordered proper refreshments for fuch as Book XI. were dying of hunger; he appointed furgeons to attend the fick and wounded; he removed fuch as could bear it into the adjacent villages; and those who would have fuffered by being carried fo far, he admitted into the hofpitals which he had fitted up in the city for his own foldiers. As foon as they recovered, he fent them home under an efcort of foldiers, and with money to bear their charges. By thefe acts of humanity, which were uncommon in that age, when war was carried on with greater rancour and ferocity than at prefent, the Duke of Guife completed the fame which he had acquired by his gallant and fuccessful defence of Metz, and engaged those whom he had vanquished to vie with his own countrymen in extolling his name<sup>g</sup>.

To these calamities in Germany, were added fuch unfortunate events in Italy, as rendered this the most disastrous year in the Emperor's life. During his refidence at Villach, Charles had applied to Cofmo di Medici for the loan of two hundred thousand crowns. But his 8 Sleid. 575. Thuan. lib. xi. 389, &c. Pere Daniel, Hift. de France, tom. iii. 392. Pere Daniel's account of this fiege is taken from the journal of the Sieur de Salignac, who was present. Natal. Comit. Hiftor. 129.

Bad fituation of the Emperor's affairs in Italy.

credit

123

1552.

BOOK XI.

1552.

credit at that time was fo low, that in order to obtain this inconfiderable fum, he was obliged to put him in poffeffion of the principality of Piombino, and by giving up that, he loft the footing which he had hitherto maintained in Tufcany, and enabled Cofmo to affume, for the future, the tone and deportment of a Prince altogether independent. Much about the time that his indigence confirained him to part with this valuable territory, he loft Siena, which was of ftill greater confequence, through the ill conduct of Don Diego de Mendoza<sup>h</sup>.

The revolt of Siena, SIENA, like moft of the great cities in Italy, had long enjoyed a republican government, under the protection of the Empire; but being torn in pieces by the diffentions between the nobility and the people, which divided all the Italian commonwealths, the faction of the people, which gained the afcendant, befought the Emperor to become the guardian of the adminiftration which they had eftablished, and admitted into their city a small body of Spanish foldiers, whom he had fent to countenance the execution of the laws, and to preferve tranquillity among them. The direction of these troops was given to Mendoza, at that time ambaffador for the Emperor at Rome, who per-h Thuan. lib. xi. 376.

fuaded

fuaded the credulous multitude, that it was BOOK XI. neceffary for their fecurity against any future attempt of the nobles, to allow him to build a citadel in Siena; and as he flattered himfelf that by means of this fortrels he might render the Emperor mafter of the city, he pushed on the works with all poffible difpatch. But he threw . off the mafk too foon. Before the fortifications were completed, he began to indulge his natural haughtiness and feverity of temper, and to treat the citizens with great infolence. At the fame time the foldiers in garrifon being paid as irregularly as the Emperor's troops usually were, lived almost at diferention upon the inhabitants, and were guilty of many acts of licence and oppression.

THESE injuries awakened the Sienefe to a fenfe of their danger. As they faw the necessity of exerting themfelves, while the unfinished fortifications of the citadel left them any hopes of fuccefs, they applied to the French ambaffador at Rome, who readily promifed them his mafter's protection and affiftance. At the fame time, forgetting their domeftick animofities when fuch a mortal blow was aimed at the liberty and existence of the republick, they fent agents to the exiled nobles, and invited them to concur with them in faving their country from the fervitude

The Sienele court the affiftance of France.

1552.

125

126

Воок XI. 1552. vitude with which it was threatened. As there was not a moment to lofe, measures were concerted speedily, but with great prudence; and were executed with equal vigour. The citizens rofe fuddenly in arms; the exiles flocked into the town from different parts with all their partifans, and what troops they could draw together; and feveral bodies of mercenaries in the pay of France appeared to support them. The Spaniards, though furprifed, and much inferior in number, defended themfelves with great courage; but feeing no profpect of relief, and having no hopes of maintaining their flation long in a half-finished fortress, they soon gave it up. The Sienefe, with the utmost alacrity, levelled it with the ground, that no monument might remain of that odious structure, which had been raifed in order to enflave them. At the fame time renouncing all connexion with the Emperor, they fent ambaffadors to thank the King of France as the reftorer of their liberty, and to entreat that he would fecure to them the perpetual enjoyment of that bleffing by continuing his protection to their republick i.

Defcent of the Turks in the kingdom of Naples.

To these missfortunes, one still more fatal had almost succeeded. The severe administration of Don Pedro de Toledo, viceroy of Naples, BOOK XI. having filled that kingdom with murmuring and difaffection, the Prince of Salerno, the head of the malecontents, had fled to the court of France, where all who bore ill-will to the Emperor or his ministers, were fure of finding protection and affistance. That nobleman, in the ufual ftyle of exiles, boafting much of his partifans, and of his great influence with them, prevailed on Henry to think of invading Naples, from expectation of being joined by all those with whom the Prince of Salerno held correspondence, or who were diffatisfied with Toledo's government. But though the first hint of this enterprife was fuggefted by the Prince of Salerno, Henry did not choose that its fuccefs should entirely depend upon his being able to fulfil the promifes which he had made. He applied for aid to Solyman, whom he courted, after his father's example, as his most vigorous auxiliary against the Emperor, and folicited him to fecond his operations by fending a powerful fleet into the Mediterranean. It was not difficult to obtain what he requested of the Sultan, who, at this time, was highly incenfed against the house of Austria, on account of the proceedings in Hungary. He ordered an hundred and fifty fhips to be equipped, that they might fail towards the coast of Naples, at whatever ever time Henry fhould name, and might co-BOOK XI. operate with the French troops in their attempts upon that kingdom. The command of this fleet was given to the corfair Dragut, an officer trained up under Barbaroffa, and fcarcely inferior to his master in courage, in talents, or in good fortune. He appeared on the coast of Calabria at the time which had been agreed on, landed at feveral places, plundered and burnt feveral villages; and at laft caffing anchor in the bay of Naples, filled that city with confternation. But as the French fleet, detained by fome accident, which the contemporary hiftorians have not explained, did not join the Turks according to concert, they, after waiting twenty days, without hearing any tidings of it, fet fail for Constantinople, and thus delivered the viceroy of Naples from the terror of an invalion, which he was in no condition to have refifted k.

<sup>1</sup> Pecci Memorie de Siena, vol. iii. p. 230. 261. Thuan. 375. 377, &c. Paruta. Hilf. Venet. 267. Mem. de Ribier, 424, &c.

127

1552.

1553. The Emperor fenfibly affectedwith the flate of his affairs.

As the French had never given fo fevere a check to the Emperor in any former campaign, they expressed immoderate joy at the fuccess of their arms. Charles himfelf, accustomed to a long feries of prosperity, felt the blow most fenfibly, and retired from Metz into the Low-Countries, much dejected with the cruel reverse of fortune which affected him in his declining age, when the violence of the gout had increased to Book XI. fuch a pitch, as entirely broke the vigour of his constitution, and rendered him peevish, difficult of access, and often incapable of applying to business. But whenever he enjoyed any interval of eafe, all his thoughts were bent on revenge; and he deliberated, with the utmost folicitude, concerning the most proper means of annoying France, and of effacing the ftain which had obfcured the reputation and glory of his arms. All the fchemes concerning Germany, which had engroffed him fo long, being difconcerted by the peace of Paffau, the affairs of the Empire became only fecondary objects of attention; and enmity to France was the predominant paffion which chiefly occupied his mind.

* Thuan. 375. 380. Mem. de Ribier, ii. 403. Gianene. when

128

1552.

THE turbulent ambition of Albert of Brandenburg excited violent commotions, which difturbed the Empire during this year. That Prince's troops having fhared in the calamities of the fiege of Metz, were greatly reduced in number. But the Emperor, prompted by gratitude for his diffinguished fervices on that occafion, or perhaps with a fecret view of fomenting divisions among the Princes of the Empire, having paid up all the money due to him, he was enabled with that fum to hire fo many of VOL. IV. the K

129 1553.

The violent proceedings of Albert of Brandenburg.

130

BCOK XI. $553-

the foldiers difmiffed from the Imperial army, that he was foon at the head of a body of men as numerous as ever. The bifhops of Bamberg and Wurtzburg having folicited the Imperial chamber, to annul, by its authority, the iniquitous conditions which Albert had compelled them to fign, that court unanimoufly found all their engagements with him to be void in their own nature, because they had been extorted by force; enjoined Albert to renounce all claim to the performance of them; and, if he should persist in such an unjust demand, exhorted all the Princes of the Empire to take arms against him as a diffurber of the publick tranquillity. To this decifion, Albert oppofed the confirmation of his transactions with the two prelates, which the Emperor had granted him as the reward of his having joined the Imperial army at Metz; and in order to intimidate his antagonists, as well as to convince them of his refolution not to relinquish his pretensions, he put his troops in motion, that he might fecure the territory in question. Various endeavours were employed, and many expedients propofed. in order to prevent the kindling a new war in Germany. But the fame warmth of temper which rendered Albert turbulent and enterprizing, infpiring him with the most fanguine hopes of of fuccefs, even in his wildeft undertakings, he difdainfully rejected all reafonable overtures of accommodation.

2

1. 1. J. .....

UPON this, the Imperial chamber iffued its decree against him, and required the Elector of Saxony, together with feveral other Princes mentioned by name, to take arms in order to carry it into execution. Maurice, and those affociated with him, were not unwilling to undertake this fervice. They were extremely folicitous to maintain publick order by fupporting the authority of the Imperial chamber, and faw the neceffity of giving a timely check to the usurpations of an ambitious Prince, who had no principle of action but regard to his own intereft, and no motive to direct him but the impulfe of ungovernable paffions. They had good reafon to fuspect, that the Emperor encouraged Albert in his extravagant and irregular proceedings, and fecretly afforded him affiftance, that, by raifing him up to rival Maurice in power, he might, in any future broil, make use of his affiftance to counterbalance and control the authority which the other had acquired in the Empire'.

<sup>1</sup> Sleid. 585. Mem. de Ribier, ii. 442. Arnoldi vita Maurit. ap. Menken, ii. 1242.

THESE

Воок ХІ. 1553-

IZI

He is condemned by the Imperial chamber,

132

BOOK XI.

1553. April 2. A confederacy formed againft him, of which Maurice was head,

THE REIGN OF THE

THESE confiderations united the most powerful princes in Germany in a league against Albert, of which Maurice was declared generaliffimo. This formidable confederacy, however, wrought no change in Albert's fentiments; but as he knew that he could not refift fo many Princes, if he should allow them time to affemble their forces, he endeavoured, by his activity, to deprive them of all the advantages which they might derive from their united power and numbers; and for that reason marched directly against Maurice, the enemy whom he dreaded moft. It was happy for the allies, that the conduct of their affairs was committed to a Prince of fuch abilities. He, by his authority and example, had infpired them with vigour; and having carried on their preparations with a degree of rapidity, of which confederate bodies are feldom capable, he was in condition to face Albert before he could make any confiderable progrefs.

He attacks Albert, THEIR armies, which were nearly equal in number, each confifting of twenty-four thousand men, met at Sieverhausen, in the duchy of Lunenburgh; and the violent animosity against each other, which posses of the two leaders, did not fuffer them to continue long inactive. The troops, inflamed with the fame hostile rage, marched marched fiercely to the combat; they fought with the greateft obstinacy; and as both generals were capable of availing themfelves of every favourable occurrence, the battle remained long doubtful, each gaining ground upon the other alternately. At last victory declared for Maurice, who was fuperior in cavalry, and Albert's army fled in confusion, leaving four thousand dead in the field, and their camp, baggage and artillery, in the hands of the conquerors. The allies bought their victory dear, their best troops fuffered greatly, two fons of the duke of Brunfwick, a Duke of Lunenburgh, and many other perfons of diffinction, were among the number of the flain<sup>m</sup>. But all thefe were foon forgotten; for Maurice himfelf, as he led up to a fecond charge a body of horfe which had been broken, received a wound with a piftol-bullet in the belly, of which he died two days after the battle, in the thirtyfecond year of his age, and in the fixth after his attaining the electoral dignity.

OF all the perfonages who have appeared in the hiftory of this active age, when great occurrences, and fudden revolutions, called forth extraordinary talents to view, and afforded them and defeats his arm y;

<sup>m</sup> Hiftoria pugnæ infelicis inter Maurit. & Albert. Thom. Wintzero auctore apud Scard. ii. 559. Sleid. 583. Rufcelli epiftres aux Princes, 154. Arnoldi vita Maurit. 1245-K 3 full 133

BOOK XI. 1553. June 9.

but is killed in the battle.

His charace ter.

Воок XI. 1553.

134

full opportunity to difplay themfelves, Maurice may justly be confidered as the most remarkable. If his exorbitant ambition, his profound diffimulation, and his unwarrantable usurpation of his kinfman's honours and dominions, exclude him from being praifed as a virtuous man; his prudence in concerting his measures, his vigour in executing them, and the uniform fuccefs with which they were attended, entitle him to the appellation of a great Prince. At an age, when Impetuolity of fpirit commonly predominates over political wifdom, when the higheft effort even of a genius of the first order is to fix on a bold fcheme, and to execute it with promptitude and courage, he formed and conducted an intricate plan of policy, which deceived the moft artful Monarch in Europe. At the very juncture when the Emperor had attained to almost unlimited despotifin, Maurice, with power feemingly inadequate to fuch an undertaking, compelled him to relinquish all his usurpations, and established not only the religious but civil liberties of Germany on fuch foundations as have hitherto remained unshaken. Although, at one period of his life, his conduct excited the jealoufy of the Protestants, and at another, drew on him the refentment of the Roman Catholicks, fuch was his mafterly address, that he was the only Prince of the age who, in any degree, poffeffed the the confidence of both, and whom both lamented as the most able as well as faithful guardian of the conftitution and laws of his country.

THE confernation which Maurice's death oc- Albert concafioned among his troops, prevented them from making the proper improvement of the victory which they had gained. Albert, whofe active courage, and profuse liberality, rendered him the darling of fuch military adventurers as were little folicitous about the justice of his cause, foon re-affembled his broken forces, and made fresh levies with such success, that he was quickly at the head of fifteen thousand men, and renewed his depredations with additional fury. But Henry of Brunswick having taken the command of the allied troops, defeated him in a fecond battle, fcarcely lefs bloody than the Sept. 12. former. Even then his courage did not fink, nor were his refources exhaufted. He made feveral efforts, and fome of them very vigorous, to retrieve his affairs: But being laid under the ban of the Empire by the Imperial chamber; being driven by degrees out of all his hereditary territories, as well as those which he had usurped; being forfaken by many of his officers, and overpowered by the number of his enemies, he fled for refuge into France. After having been, for a confiderable time, the terror and fcourge of Germany, he lingered out fome years in an indigent K 4

135 BOOK XI. 1553.

tinues the

He is driven out of Germany.

¥36 Воок XI.

1553.

January 12, 1557. indigent and dependant flate of exile, the miferies of which his reftlefs and arrogant fpirit endured with the moft indignant impatience. Upon his death without iffue, his territories, which had been feized by the Princes who took arms against him, were reftored, by a decree of the Emperor, to his collateral heirs of the house of Brandenburg<sup>n</sup>.

Maurice's brother Augustus fucceedshim in the electoral dignity.

MAURICE having left only one daughter. who was afterwards married to William Prince of Orange, by whom fhe had a fon who bore his grandfather's name, and inherited the great talents for which he was confpicuous, a violent difpute arefe concerning the fucceffion to his honours and territories. John Frederick, the degraded elector, claimed the electoral dignity, and that part of his patrimonial eftate of which he had been violently ftripped after the Smalkaldick war. Auguftus, Maurice's only brother, pleaded his right not only to the hereditary poffeffions of their family, but to the electoral dignity, and to the territories which Maurice had acquired. As Augustus was a Prince of confiderable abilities, as well as of great candour and gentleness of manners, the states of Saxony, forgetting the merits and fufferings of their former master, declared warmly in his favour. His pretensions were powerfully supported by the King of Denmark, whose daughter he had married, and zealously espoused by the King of the Romans, out of regard to Maurice's memory. The degraded Elector, though secretly favoured by his ancient enemy the Emperor, was at last obliged to relinquish his claim, upon obtaining a small addition to the territories which had been allotted to him, together with a stipulation, securing to his family the eventual succession, upon a failure of male heirs in the Albertine line. That unfortunate, but magnanimous Prince died next year, foon after ratifying this treaty of agreement; and the electoral dignity is still posfessed by the defcendants of Augustus<sup>o</sup>.

Sleid. 592. 594. 599. Struv. Corp. hift. Germ. 1075. pretenfions

DURING thefe transactions in Germany, war was carried on in the Low-Countries with confiderable vigour. The Emperor, impatient to efface the stain which his ignominious repulse at Metz left upon his military reputation, had an army early in the field, and laid siege to Terouane. Though the town was of such importance, that Francis used to call it one of the two pillows on which a King of France might sleep with security, the fortifications were in differentiar: Henry, trusting to what had happened at Metz, thought nothing more was necessary to render ° Sleid. 587. Thuan. 409. Struv. Corp. hift. Germ.

Hoftilities in the Low= Countries.

all

Book XI.

FOOK XI.

138

1553.

June 21.

all the efforts of the enemy abortive, than to reinforce the garrifon with a confiderable number of the young nobility. But d'Effe, a veteran officer who commanded them, being killed, and the Imperialists pushing the fiege with great vigour and perfeverance, the place was taken by affault. That it might not fall again into the hands of the French, Charles ordered not only the fortifications but the town to be rafed, and the inhabitants to be difperfed in the adjacent cities. Elated with this fuccefs, the Iniperialifts immediately invefted Hefdin, which, though defended with great bravery, was likewife taken by affault, and fuch of the garrifon as efcaped the fword were made prifoners. The Emperor entrufted the conduct of this fiege to Emanuel Philibert of Savoy, Prince of Piedmont, who, on that occasion, gave the first difplay of those great talents for military command, which foon entitled him to be ranked among the first generals of the age, and facilitated his reestablishment in his hereditary dominions, the greater part of which having been over-run by Francis in his expeditions into Italy, were still occupied by Henry P.

The progrefs of the Imperialists difquiets the French King. THE loss of these towns, together with fo many perfons of diffinction, either killed or taken by the enemy, was no inconfiderable cala- BOOK XI. mity to France, and Henry felt it very fenfibly ; but he was still more mortified at the Emperor's having affumed his wonted fuperiority in the field fo foon after the blow at Metz, which the French had reprefented as fatal to his power. He was ashamed, too, of his own remiffnels and exceffive fecurity at the opening of the campaign; and, in order to repair that error, he affembled a numerous army, and led it into the Low-Countries.

P Thuan. 411. Harzi Annales Brabant. 669.

taken

Roused at the approach of fuch a formidable enemy, Charles left Bruffels, where he had been fhut up fo clofely during feven months, that it came to be believed in many parts of Europe that he was dead; and though he was fo much. debilitated by the gout that he could hardly bear the motion of a litter, he haftened to join his army. The eyes of all Europe were turned with expectation towards those mighty and exasperated rivals, between whom a decifive battle was now thought unavoidable. But Charles having prudently declined to hazard a general engagement, and the violence of the autumnal rains rendering it impoffible for the French to undertake any fiege, they retired, without having performed any thing fuitable to the great preparations which they had made q.

9 Harzus, 672. Thuan. 414.

1553.

139

THE

BOOK XI.

1553. The Imperalifts onfuccefsful in Italy.

THE Imperial arms did not make the fame progrefs in Italy. The narrownefs of the Emperor's finances feldom allowed him to act with vigour in two different places at the fame time; and having exerted himfelf to the utmost in order to make a great effort in the Low Countries, his operations on the other fide of the Alps were proportionally feeble. The viceroy of Naples, in conjunction with Colmo di Medici, who was greatly alarmed at the introduction of French troops into Siena, endeavoured to become master of that city. But, inftead of reducing the Sienefe, the Imperialifts were obliged to retire abruptly, in order to defend their own country, upon the appearance of the Turkish fleet, which threatened the coast of Naples; and the French not only established themselves more firmly in Tuscany, but, by the affiftance of the Turks, conquered a great part of the illand of Corfica, fubject, at that time, to the Genoefe '.

and in Hangary. THE affairs of the house of Austria declined no lefs in Hungary during the course of this year. As the troops which Ferdinand kept in Transfylvania received their pay very irregularly, they lived almost at discretion upon the inhabitants; and their infolence and rapaciousfields greatly

* Thuan. 417.

greatly difgusted all ranks of men, and alienated Book XI. them from their new fovereign, who, inflead of protecting, plundered his fubjects. Their indignation at this, added to their defire of revenging Martinuzzi's death, wrought fo much upon a turbulent nobility, impatient of injury, and upon a fierce people, prone to change, that they were ripe for a revolt. At that very juncture, their late Queen Ifabella, together with her fon, appeared in Tranfylvania. Her ambitious mind could not bear the folitude and inactivity of a private life; and repenting quickly of the ceffion which the had made of the crown in the year one thousand five hundred and fifty-one, she left the place of her retreat, hoping that the diffatisfaction of the Hungarians with the Auftrian government would prompt them once more to recognife her fon's right to the crown. Some noblemen of great eminence declared immediately in his fayour. The Basha of Belgrade, by Solyman's order, espoused his cause, in opposition to Ferdinand; the Spanish and German foldiers, inftead of advancing against the enemy, mutinied for want of pay, declaring that they would march back to Vienna; fo that Castaldo, their general, was obliged to abandon Tranfylvania to Ifabella and the Turks, and to place himfelf at the head of the mutineers, that by his authority he might reftrain them from plundering the

Ferdinand obliged to abandon Tranfylvania.

141

1553.

142

Воок IX. 1553. the Auftrian territories, through which they paffed °.

Solyman's domeftick diftreffes.

The tragical history of his fon Muftapha.

FERDINAND's attention was turned fo entirely towards the affairs of Germany, and his treafures fo much exhausted by his late efforts in Hungary, that he made no attempt to recover this valuable province, although a favourable opportunity for that purpose presented itself, as Solyman was then engaged in a war with Perfia, and involved besides in domestick calamities which engroffed and difturbed his mind. Solyman, though diftinguished, by many accomplishments, from the other Ostoman Princes, had all the paffions peculiar to that violent and haughty race. He was jealous of his authority, fudden as well as furious in his anger, and fusceptible of all that rage of love, which reigns in the Eaft, and often produces the wildeft and most tragical effects. His favourite mistress was a Circaffian flave of exquisite beauty, who bore him a fon called Mustapha, whom, both on account of his birth-right and merit, he deftined to be the heir of his crown. Roxalana, a Ruffian captive, foon fupplanted the Circaffian, and gained the Sultan's heart. Having the address to retain the conquest which she had made, she kept poffeffion of his love without any rival for many years, during which fhe brought him Book XI. feveral fons and one daughter. All the happinefs, however, which the derived from the unbounded fway that fhe had acquired over a monarch whom one half of the world revered or dreaded, was embittered by perpetual reflections on Mustapha's accession to the throne, and the certain death of her fons, who, fhe forefaw, would be immediately facrificed, according to the barbarous jealoufy of Turkish policy, to the fafety of the new Emperor. By dwelling continually on this melancholy idea, fhe came gradually to view Mustapha as the enemy of her children, and to hate him with more than a step mother's ill-will. This prompted her to wish his destruction, in order to fecure for one of her own fons the throne which was deftined for him. Nor did fhe want either ambition to attempt fuch a high enterprife, or the arts requifite for carrying it into execution. Having prevailed on the Sultan to give her only daughter in marriage to Ruftan the Grand Vifier, she difclofed her scheme to that crafty minister, who perceiving that it was his own interest to cooperate with her, readily promifed his affiftance towards aggrandizing that branch of the royal line, to which he was fo nearly allied.

* Thuan, 430.

As foon as Roxalana had concerted her meafures with this able confident, the began to affect 143

1553.

144

BOOK XI.

1553-affect a wonderful zeal for the Mahometan religion, to which Solyman was fuperflitioufly attached, and propoled to found and endow a royal mosque, a work of great expence, but deemed by the Turks meritorious in the higheft degree. The Mufti whom fhe confulted, approved much of her pious intention; but, having been gained and instructed by Rustan, told her, that fhe being a flave could derive no benefit herfelf from that holy deed, for all the merit of it would accrue to Solyman, the mafter whofe property fhe was. Upon this fhe feemed to be overwhelmed with forrow, and to fink into the deepest melancholy, as if she had been difgusted with life and all its enjoyments. Solyman, who was absent with the army, being informed of this dejection of mind, and of the caufe from which it proceeded, difcovered all the folicitude of a lover to remove it, and by a writing under his hand declared her a free woman. Roxalana having gained this point, proceeded to build the Mofque, and re-affumed her usual gaiety of spirit. But when Solyman, on his return to Constantinople, fent an eunuch, according to the cuftom of the feraglio, to bring her to partake of his bed, fhe, feemingly with deep regret, but in the most peremptory manner, declined to follow the eunuch, declaring that what had been an honour to her while a flave, became a crime 6 a crime as fhe was now a free woman, and that the would not involve either the Sultan or herfelf in the guilt that must be contracted by fuch an open violation of the law of their prophet. Solyman, whose passion this difficulty, as well as the affected delicacy which gave rife to it, heightened and inflamed, had recourfe immediately to the Mufti for his direction. He replied, agreeably to the Koran, that Roxalana's fcruples were well founded; but added, artfully, in words which Ruftan had taught him to ufe, that it was in the Sultan's power to remove these difficulties by espousing her as his lawful wife. The amorous monarch closed eagerly with the propofal, and folemnly married her, according to the form of the Mahometan ritual; though, by doing fo, he difregarded a maxim of policy which the pride of the Ottoman blood had taught all the Sultans fince Bajazet I. to confider as inviolable. From his time, none of the Turkish monarchs had married, because, when he was vanquished and taken prisoner by Tamerlane, his wife had been abufed with barbarous infolence by the Tartars. That no fimilar calamity might fubject the Ottoman family to the like difgrace, the Sultans admitted none to their bed but flaves, whofe difhonour could not bring any fuch stain upon their house.

VOL. IV.

L

BUT

145 Боок XI.

1553.

Воок XI. 1553. But the more uncommon the ftep was, the more it convinced Roxalana, of the unbounded influence which fhe had acquired over the Sultan's heart; and emboldened her to profecute, with greater hope of fuccefs, the fcheme that fhe had formed in order to deftroy Muftapha. This young Prince having been entrufted by his father, according to the practice of the Sultans in that age, with the government of feveral different provinces, was at that time invefted with the administration in Diarbequir, 'the ancient Mefopotamia, which Solyman had wrefted from the Perfians, and added to his empire. In from the Perfians, and added to his empire. In all thefe different commands, Muftapha had conducted himfelf with fuch cautious prudence as could give no offence to his father, though, at the fame time, he governed with fo much moderation as well as juffice, and difplayed fuch valour and generofity as rendered him equally the favourite of the people and the darling of the foldiery.

THERE was no room to lay any folly or vice to his charge, that could impair the high opinion which his father entertained of him. Roxalana's malevolence was more refined; fhe turned his virtues againft him, and made ufe of thefe as engines for his deftruction. She often mentioned, in Solyman's prefence, the fplendid qualities of his fon; fhe celebrated his courage, courage, his liberality, his popular arts, with BOOK XI. malicious and exaggerated praife. As foon as fhe perceived that the Sultan heard thefe encomiums, which were often repeated, with uneafinefs; that fuspicion of his fon began to mingle itfelf with his former efteem; and that by degrees he came to view him with jealoufy and fear, she introduced, as by accident, fome difcourse concerning the rebellion of his father Selim against Bajazet his grandfather : fhe took notice of the bravery of the veteran troops under Mustapha's command, and of the neighbourhood of Diarbequir to the territories of the Perfian Sophi, Solyman's mortal enemy. By these arts, whatever remained of paternal tenderness was entirely extinguished, and fuch paffions were kindled in the breaft of the Sultan, as gave all Roxalana's malignant fuggeftions the colour not only of probability but of truth. A deep-rooted hatred fucceeded, now, to his suspicions and fear of Mustapha. He appointed fpies to obferve and report all his words and actions; he watched and ftood on his guard against him as his most dangerous enemy.

146

HAVING thus alienated the Sultan's heart from Mustapha, Roxalana ventured upon another ftep. She entreated Solyman to allow her own fons the liberty of appearing at court, hoping that by gaining accels to their father, they 147 1553.

148

1553.

BOOK XI. they might, by their good qualities and dutiful deportment, infinuate themfelves into that place in his affections which Multapha had formerly held; and, though what fhe demanded was contrary to the practice of the Ottoman family in that age, the uxorious monarch granted her requeft. To all these female intrigues Rustan added an artifice still more fubtle, which completed the Sultan's delufion, and heightened his jealoufy and fear. He wrote to the Bashaws of the provinces adjacent to Diarbequir, inftructing them to fend him regular intelligence of Mustapha's proceedings in his government, and to each of them he gave a private hint, flowing in appearance from his zeal for their interest, that nothing would be more acceptable to the Sultan than to receive favourable accounts of a fon whom he deftined to fuftain the glory of the Ottoman name. The Bashaws ignorant of his fraudulent intention, and eager to pay court to their fovereign at fuch an eafy price, filled their letters with studied but fatal panegyricks of Mustapha, representing him as a Prince worthy to fucceed fuch an illustrious father, and as endowed with talents which might enable him to emulate, perhaps to equal his fame. These letters were industriously fhewn to Solyman, at the feafons when it was known that they would make the deepeft impreffion.

preffion. Every expression in recommendation BOOK XI. of his fon wounded him to the heart; he fufpected his principal officers of being ready to favour the most desperate attempts of a Prince whom they were fo fond to praife; and fancying that he faw them already affaulting his throne with rebellious arms, he determined, while it was yet in his power, to anticipate the blow, and to fecure his own fafety by his fon's death.

For this purpose, though under pretence of renewing the war against Persia, he ordered Ruftan to march towards Diarbequir at the head of a numerous army, and to rid him of a fon whofe life he deemed inconfiftent with his own fafety. But that crafty minister did not choose to be loaded with the odium of having executed this cruel order. As foon as he arrived in Syria he wrote to Solyman, that the danger was fo imminent as called for his immediate prefence; that the camp was full of Mustapha's emissaries; that many of the foldiers were corrupted; that the affections of all leaned towards him; that he had difcovered a negociation which had been carried on with the Sophi of Perfia in order to marry Mustapha with one of his daughters; that he already felt his own talents as well as authority to be inadequate to the exigencies of fuch an arduous conjuncture; that the Sultan alone

149

1553.

1553.

BOOK XI. alone had fagacity to difcern what refolution should be taken in those circumstances, and power to carry that refolution into execution.

> THIS charge of courting the friendship of the Sophi, Roxalana and Ruftan had referved as the last and most envenomed of all their calumnies. It operated with the violence which they expected from Solyman's inveterate abhorrence of the Perfians, and threw him into the wildeft transports of rage. He set out instantly for Syria, and haftened thither with all the precipitation and impatience of fear and revenge. As foon as he joined his army near Aleppo, and had concerted measures with Rustan, he fent a Chiaus or meffenger of the court to his fon, requiring him to repair immediately to his prefence. Muftapha, though no ftranger to his ftep-mother's machinations, or to Ruftan's malice, or to his father's violent temper, yet relying on his own innocence, and hoping to difcredit the accufations of his enemies by the promptitude of his obedience, followed the meffenger without delay to Aleppo. The moment he arrived in the camp, he was introduced into the Sultan's tent. As he entered it, he obferved, nothing that could give him any alarm; no additional crowd of attendants, no body of armed guards, but the fame order and filence filence which always reign in the Sultan's apart- BOOK XI. ments. In a few minutes, however, feveral mutes appeared, at the fight of whom Muftapha knowing what was his doorn, cried with a loud voice, " Lo, my death !" and attempted to fly. The mutes rushed forward to feize him, he refifted and ftruggled, demanding with the utmost earnestness to see the Sultan; and defpair, together with the hope of finding protection from the foldiers, if he could escape out of the tent, animated him with fuch extraordinary ftrength, that, for fome time, he baffled all the efforts of the executioners. Solyman was within hearing of his fon's cries, as well as of the noife which the ftruggle occafioned. Impatient of this delay of his revenge, and ftruck with terror at the thoughts of Muftapha's efcaping, he drew afide the curtain which divided the tent, and thrufting in his head, darted a fierce look towards the mutes, and with wild and threatening gestures seemed to chide them for floth and timidity. At fight of his father's furious and unrelenting countenance, Mustapha's ftrength failed, and his courage forfook him; the mutes fastened the bow-string about his . neck, and in a moment put an end to his life.

I

150

THE dead body was exposed before the Sultan's tent. The foldiers gathered round it, and L 4 · contem1553.

151

1553.

BOOK XI. contemplating that mournful object with afto. nishment, and forrow, and indignation, were ready, if a leader had not been wanting, to have broke out into the wildest excesses of rage. After giving vent to the first expressions of their grief, they retired each man to his tent, and fhutting themfelves up, bewailed in fecret the cruel fate of their favourite; nor was there one of them who tafted food or even water during the remainder of that day. Next morning the fame folitude and filence reigned in the camp; and Solyman, being afraid that fome dreadful ftorm would follow this fullen calm, in order to appeafe the enraged foldiers, deprived Ruftan of the feals, ordered him to leave the camp, and raifed Achmet, a gallant officer much beloved in the army, to the dignity of Visier. This change, however, was made in concert with Ruftan himfelf; that crafty minister fuggesting it as the only expedient which could fave himfelf or his master. But within a few months, when the refentment of the foldiers began to fublide, and the name of Mustapha to be forgotten, Achmet was ftrangled by the Sultan's command, and Rustan reinstated in the office of Vifier. Together with his former power, he re-affumed the plan for exterminating the race of Mustapha which he had concerted with Roxalana; and as they were afraid that an only fon whom Mustapha had left, might grow up to avenge his death, they redoubled their activity, POOK XI. and by employing the fame arts against him which they had practifed against his father, they infpired Solyman with the fame fears, and prevailed on him to iffue orders for putting to death that young innocent Prince. These orders were executed with barbarous zeal, by an eunuch, who was difpatched to Burfa, the place where the Prince refided; and no rival was left to dispute the Ottoman throne with the fons of Roxalana<sup>t</sup>.

152

avenge

SUCH a tragical scene, productive of so deep Charles prodistress, seldom occurs but in the history of the great monarchies of the East, where the force of the climate works up and fublimes all the paffions of the human mind into the greatest fury, and the abfolute power of fovereigns enables them to act with uncontroled violence ; while it paffed in the court of Solyman, and engaged his whole attention, Charles was purfuing, with the utmost ardour, a new scheme for aggrandizing his family. About this time, Edward the Sixth of England, after a short reign, in which he displayed such virtues as filled his fubjects with fanguine hopes of being happy

* Augerii Gislenii Busbequii Legationis Turcicæ Epistolæ iv. Franc. 1615. p. 37. Thuan. lib. 12. p. 432. Mem. de Ribier, ii. 457. Mauroceni Hiflor. Veneta, lib. vii. p. 60, jects a marriage between his fon and Mary of England.

1553.

153

under

154

Воок XI. 1553. under his government, and made them bear with patience all that they fuffered from the weakness, the diffensions and the ambition of the ministers who affumed the administration during his minority, was feized with a lingering diftemper which threatened his life. The Emperor no fooner received an account of this, than his ambition, always attentive to feize every opportunity of acquiring an increase of power or of territories to his fon, fuggested the thought of adding England to his other kingdoms, by the marriage of Philip with the Princess Mary, the heir of Edward's crown. Being apprehensive, however, that his fon, who was then in Spain, might decline a match with a Princefs in her thirty-eighth year, and eleven years older than himfelf "; Charles determined, notwithstanding his own age and infirmities, to make offer of himfelf as a hufband to his coufin.

To which Philip gives his confent. But though Mary was fo far advanced in years, and defitute of every charm either of perfon or of manners that could win affection, or command efteem, Philip, without hefitation, gave his confent to the match proposed by his father, and was willing, according to the usual maxim of Princes, to facrifice his inclination to his ambition. In order to ensure success, the

<sup>1</sup> Palav. hift. Concil. Trid. v. ii. c. 13. p. 150.

Emperor,

Emperor, even before Edward's death, began to take fuch steps as might facilitate it. Upon Edward's demife, Mary mounted the throne of England; the pretenfions of the lady Jane Gray proving as unfortunate as they were ill founded*. Charles fent immediately a pompous embaffy to London to congratulate Mary on her acceffion to the throne, and to propose the alliance with his fon. The Queen, dazzled with the profpect of marrying the heir of the greatest Monarch in Europe; fond of uniting more closely with her mother's family, to which fhe had been always warmly attached; and eager to fecure the powerful aid which the knew would be neceffary towards carrying on her favourite scheme of reeftablishing the Romish religion in England, liftened in the most favourable manner to the propofal. Among her fubjects, it met with a very different reception. Philip, it was well known, contended for all the tenets of the church of Rome with a fanguinary zeal which exceeded the measure even of Spanish bigotry: this alarmed all the numerous partifans of the Reformation. The Castilian haughtiness and referve were far from being acceptable to the English, who, having feveral times feen their throne occupied by perfons who were born fubjects, had become accustomed to an unceremo-* Carte's hift. of England, iii. 287.

Воок XI. 1553.

155

The fentiments of Mary and of the English with regard to it.

niqus

Воок XI.

nious and familiar intercourfe with their fovereigns. They could not think, without the utmolt uneafinefs, of admitting a foreign Prince to that influence in their councils, which the hufband of their Queen would naturally poffefs. They dreaded, both from Philip's overbearing temper, and from the maxims of the Spanifh monarchy which he had imbibed, that he would infufe ideas into the Queen's mind, dangerous to the liberties of the nation, and would introduce foreign troops and money into the kingdom, to affift her in any attempt againft them.

The houfe of Commons remonstrate against it.

Full of these apprehensions, the house of Commons, though in that age extremely obfequious to the will of their Monarchs, prefented a warm address against the Spanish match; many pamphlets were published, representing the dangerous confequences of the alliance with Spain, and defcribing Philip's bigotry and arrogance in the most odious colours. But Mary, inflexible in all her refolutions, paid no regard to the remonftrances of her Commons, or to the fentiments of the people. The Emperor, having fecured, by various arts, the ministers whom fhe trufted most, they approved warmly of the match, and large fums were remitted by him in order to gain the reft of the council. Cardinal Pole, whom the Pope, immediately upon Mary's acceffion, had difpatched as his legate into England, land, in order to reconcile his native country to the fee of Rome, was detained by the Emperor's command at Dillinghen in Germany, left by his prefence he fhould thwart Philip's pretenfions, and employ his intereft in favour of his kinfman Courtnay Earl of Devonfhire, whom the Englifh ardently wifhed their fovereign to choofe for a hufband <sup>y</sup>.

156

As the negociation did not admit of delay, it was carried forward with the greatest rapidity, the Emperor agreeing, without hefitation, to every article in favour of England, which Mary's ministers either represented as necessary to footh the people and reconcile them to the match, or that was fuggested by their own fears and jealouly of a foreign master. The chief articles were, that Philip, during his marriage with the Queen, should bear the title of King of England, but the entire administration of affairs, as well as the fole dispofal of all revenues, offices, and benefices, fhould remain with the Queen; that the heirs of the marriage fhould, together with the crown of England, inherit the dutchy of Burgundy and the Low-Countries; that if Prince Charles, Philip's only fon by a former marriage, should die without issue, his children by the Queen, whether male or female, fhould fucceed to the crown of Spain, and all the Em-

7 Carte, iii. 288.

Воок XI. 1553.

137

The marrisge treaty concluded,

I554. January 12.

peror's

158

Воок XI. 1554.

peror's hereditary dominions; that, before the confummation of the marriage, Philip fhould fwear folemnly, that he would retain no domeftick who was not a fubject of the Queen, and would bring no foreigners into the kingdom that might give umbrage to the English; that he would make no alteration in the conftitution or laws of England; that he would not carry the Queen, or any of the children born of this marriage, out of the kingdom; that if the Queen should die before him without iffue, he would immediately leave the crown to the lawful heir, without claiming any right of administration whatever; that in confequence of this marriage, England should not be engaged in any war fubfifting between France and Spain; and that the alliance between France and England fhould remain in full force z.

Riscontent and apprehenfions of the English, BUT this treaty, though both the Emperor and Mary's ministers employed their utmost address in framing it fo as to please the English, was far from quieting their fears and jealouss. They faw that words and promises were a feeble fecurity against the encroachments of an ambitious Prince, who, as soon as he got possifies of the power and advantages which the Queen's husband must necessarily enjoy, could easily evade any of the articles which either limited his BOOK XI. authority or obstructed his schemes. They were convinced that the more favourable the conditions of the present treaty were to England, the more Philip would be tempted to violate, them; and they dreaded that England, like Naples, Milan, and the other countries annexed to the Spanish crown, would foon feel the intolerable weight of its oppreflive dominion, and be constrained, as these had been, to waste its wealth and vigour in wars wherein it had no interest, and from which it could derive no advantage, Thefe fentiments prevailed fo generally, that every part of the kingdom was filled with difcontent at the match, and with indignation against the advisers of it. Sir Thomas Wyat's in-Wyat, a gentleman of fome note, and of good intentions towards the publick, took advantage of this, and roufed the inhabitants of Kent to arms, in order to fave their country from a foreign yoke. Such numbers reforted in a fhort time to his ftandard; he marched to London with fuch rapidity; and the Queen was fo utterly unprovided for defence, that the afpect of affairs was extremely threatening; and if any nobleman of diffinction had joined the malecontents, or had Wyat poffeffed talents equal, in any degree, to the boldnefs of his enterprize, the infurrection must have proved fatal to Mary's

<sup>2</sup> Rymer's Foed. vol. xv. 377. 393. Mem. de Ribier, ii. 498.

159

1554.

furrection.

160

Воок ХІ.

1

Mary's power. But all his measures were concerted with fo little prudence, and executed with fuch irrefolution, that many of his followers forfook him; the reft were difperfed by an handful of men; and he himfelf was taken prisoner, without having made any effort worthy of the caufe that he had undertaken, or fuitable to the ardour with which he engaged in it. He fuffered the punishment due to his rashness and rebellion. The Queen's authority was confirmed and increafed by her fuccefs in defeating this inconfiderate attempt to abridge it. The lady Jane Gray, whofe title the ambition of her relations had fet up in opposition to the Queen's, was, notwithstanding her youth and innocence, brought to the scaffold. The lady Elizabeth, the Queen's fifter, was observed with the most jealous attention. The treaty, of marriage was ratified by the parliament.

The marriage celebrated. PHILIP landed in England with a magnificent retinue, celebrated his nuptials with great folemnity; and though he could not lay afide his natural feverity and pride, or affume gracious and popular manners, he endeavoured to conciliate the favour of the Englifh nobility by his extraordinary liberality. In cafe that fhould fail of acquiring him fuch influence in the government of the kingdom as he aimed at obtaining, the the Emperor kept a body of twelve thousand BOOK XI. men on the coast of Flanders, in readiness to 1554. embark for England, and to fupport him in all his enterprizes.

EMBOLDENED by all these favourable circum- Mary's ftances, Mary purfued the scheme of extirpating the Protestant religion out of her dominions, with the most precipitate zeal. The laws of Edward the Sixth, in favour of the Reformation, were repealed; the Protestant clergy ejected; all the forms and rites of the Popish worship were re-established; the nation was folemnly abfolved from the guilt which it had contracted during the period of its apoftacy, and was publickly reconciled to the church of Rome by cardinal Pole, who, immediately after the Queen's marriage, was permitted to continue his journey to England, and to exercife his legantine functions with the most ample power. Not fatisfied with having overturned the Protestant church, and having established her own fystem on its ruins, Mary infisted that all her fubjects should conform to the fame mode of worship which she preferred; should profess their faith in the same creed which she had approved; and abjure every practice or opinion that was deemed repugnant to either of them. Powers altogether unknown in the Eng-VOL. IV. lift M mealures to overturnthe Protestant religion in England.

161

BOOK XI. 1554.

lish constitution, were vested in certain persons appointed to take cognizance of herefy, and they proceeded to exercise them with more than inquifitorial feverity. The profpect of danger, however, did not intimidate the principal teachers of the Protestant doctrines, who believed that they were contending for truths of the utmost confequence to the happiness of mankind. They boldly avowed their fentiments, and were condemned to that cruel death which the church of Rome referves for its enemies. This flocking punishment was inflicted with that barbarity which the rancour of falle zeal alone can infpire. The English, who are inferior in humanity to no people in Europe, and remarkable for the mildnefs of their publick executions, beheld, with aftonishment and horror, perfons who had filled the most respectable stations in their church, and who were venerable on account of their age, their piety, and their literature, condemned to endure torments to which even the most atrocious criminals were not fubjected.

The oblacles which the had to furmount.

This extreme rigour did not accomplish the end at which Mary aimed. The patience and fortitude with which these martyrs for the Reformation fubmitted to their fufferings, the heroick contempt of death expressed by persons of every rank, and age, and fex, confirmed many more more in the Protestant faith, than the threats of BOOK XI. their enraged perfecutors could frighten into apostacy. The business of such as were entrusted with trying of hereticks multiplied continually, and appeared to be as endlefs as it was odious. The Queen's ableft ministers became fensible how impolitick, as well as dangerous, it was to irritate the people by the frequent spectacle of publick executions, which they detefted as no lefs unjust than cruel. Even Philip was fo thoroughly convinced of her having run to an excefs of rigour, that on this occafion he affumed a part to which he was little accustomed, becoming an advocate for moderation and lenity a.

Bur, notwithstanding this attempt to ingra- The Erglish jealous of tiate himfelf with the English, they discovered a conftant jealoufy and diftrust of all his intentions; and when fome members, who had been gained by the court, ventured to move in the House of Commons that the nation ought to affift the Emperor, the Queen's father-in-law, in his war against France, the proposal was rejected with general diffatisfaction. A motion which was made, that the parliament fhould give its confent that Philip might be publickly crowned as the Queen's hufband, met with " Godwin's Annals of Q. Mary ap, Kennet, v. ii. p. 329. Burnet's hift. of Refor. ii. 298. 305.

M 2

fuch

163 1554.

Philip.

164

Боок XI Г

fuch a cold reception, that it was inflantly withdrawn<sup>b</sup>.

The French Kingalarmed at the match between Philip and Mary.

THE King of France had observed the progrefs of the Emperor's negociation in England with much uneafinefs. The great acceffion of territories as well as reputation which his enemy would acquire by the marriage of his fon with the Queen of fuch a powerful kingdom, was obvious and formidable. He eafily forefaw that the English, notwithstanding all their fears and precautions, would be foon drawn in to take part in the quarrels on the continent, and be compelled to act in fubferviency to the Emperor's ambitious fchemes. For this reason, Henry had given it in charge to his ambaffador at the court of London, to employ all his addrefs in order to defeat or retard the treaty of marriage; and as there was not, at that time, any Prince of the blood in France, whom he could propofe to the Queen as a hufband, he inftructed him to co operate with fuch of the English as wished their fovereign to marry one of her own fubjects. But the Queen's ardour and precipitation in clofing with the first overtures in favour of Philip, having rendered all his endeavours ineffectual, Henry was fo far from thinking it prudent to give

* Carte's hift. of England, iii. 314.

give any aid to the English malecontents, though BOOK XI. earneftly folicited by Wyat and their other leaders, who tempted him to take them under his protection, by offers of great advantage to France, that he commanded his ambaffador to congratulate the Queen in the warmest terms upon the fuppreffion of the infurrection.

Bur, notwithstanding these external profesfions, Henry dreaded fo much the confequence of this alliance, which more than compensated for all the Emperor had loft in Germany, that he determined to carry on his military operations both in the Low-Countries, and in Italy, with extraordinary vigour, in order that he might compel Charles to accept of an equitable peace, before his daughter-in-law could furmount the averlion of her fubjects to a war on the continent, and prevail on them to affift the Emperor either with money or troops. For this purpose he exerted himself to the utmost in order to have a numerous army early affembled on the frontiers of the Netherlands, and while one part of it laid wafte the open country of Artois, the main body, under the Conftable Montmorency, advanced towards the provinces of Liege and Hainault by the forest of Ardennes.

His preparations for a vigorous campaign,

Elim

M 3

165

1554.

166 Eook XI.

THE REIGN OF THE

1554. The progrefs of his atms.

June 22.

The Emperor little able to obftruct it,

THE campaign was opened with the fiege of Mariemburgh, a town which the Queen of Hungary, the governess of the Low Countries, had fortified at great expence; but, being deftitute of a sufficient garrison, it surrendered in fix days. Henry, elated with this fuccefs, put himfelf at the head of his army, and invefting Bouvines, took it by affault, after a fhort refistance. With equal facility he became master of Dinant; and then turning to the left bent his march towards the province of Artois. The vaft fums which the Emperor had remitted into England, had fo exhausted his treasury, as to render his preparations at this juncture, flower and more dilatory than ufual. He had no body of troops to make head against the French at their first entrance into his territories; and though he drew together all the forces in the country in the utmost hurry, and gave the command of them to Emanuel Philibert of Savoy, they were in no condition to face an enemy fo far fuperior in number. The Prince of Savoy, however, by his activity and good conduct, made up for his want of troops. By watching all the motions of the French at a diftance, and by chufing his own pofts with skill. he put it out of their power either to form any flege of confequence, or to attack him. Want of of fubfiftence foon obliged them to fall back BOOK XI. towards their own frontiers, after having burnt all the open towns, and having plundered the country through which they marched with a cruelty and licence more becoming a body of light troops than a royal army led by a great monarch.

BUT Henry, that he might not difmifs his The French army without attempting fome conquest adequate to the yast preparations, as well as fanguine hopes, with which he had opened the campaign, invested Renti, a place deemed in that age of great importance, as, by its fituation on the confines of Artois and the Boulonnois, it covered the former province, and protected the parties which made incursions into the latter. The town, which was ftrongly fortified and provided with a numerous garrifon, made a gallant defence; but being warmly preffed by a powerful army, it must foon have yielded. The Emperor, who at that time enjoyed a fhort in. terval of ease from the gout, was fo folicitous to fave it, that, although he could bear no other motion but that of a litter, he inftantly put himfelf at the head of his army, which having received feveral reinforcements was now ftrong enough to approach the enemy. The French were eager to decide the fate of Renti by a battle, M 4.

inveftRenti.

167 1554.

BOOK XI. 1554.

battle, and expected it from the Emperor's arrival in his camp; but Charles avoided a general action with great industry, and as he had nothing in view but to fave the town, he hoped to accomplish that, without exposing himself to the confequences of such a dangerous and doubtful event.

An action between the two armies. Aug. 13.

Notwithstanding all his precautions, a difpute, about a post which both armies endeavoured to feize, brought on an engagement which proved almost general. The Duke of Guife, who commanded the wing of the French which flood the brunt of the combat, difplayed valour and conduct worthy of the defender of Metz; the Imperialifts after an obffinate ftruggle were repulfed; the French remained master's of the post in dispute, and if the Constable, either from his natural caution and flownefs, or from unwillingness to support a rival whom he hated, had not delayed bringing up the main body to fecond the impreffion which Guife had made, the rout of the enemy must have been complete. The Emperor, notwithstanding the lofs which he had fuftained, continued in the fame camp; and the French, being straightened for provisions, and finding it impoffible to carry on the fiege in the face of an hoftile army, quitted their intrenchments. They retired openly, openly, courting the enemy to approach, rather than fhunning an engagement.

168

BUT Charles, having gained his end, fuffered The Impethem to march off unmolested. As foon as his troops entered their own country, Henry threw garrifons into the frontier towns, and difmiffed the reft of the army. This encouraged the Imperialists to push forward with a confiderable body of troops into Picardy, and by laying wafte the country with fire and fword, they endeavoured to revenge themfelves for the ravages which the French had committed in Hainault and Artois . But, as they were not able to reduce any place of importance, they gained nothing more than the enemy had done by this cruel and inglorious' method of carrying on the war.

THE arms of France were still more unfuc- Affairs of cefsful in Italy. The footing which the French had acquired in Siena, occasioned much uneasiness to Cosmo di Medici, the most fagacious and enterprizing of all the Italian Princes. He dreaded the neighbourhood of a powerful people, to whom all who favoured the ancient republican government in Florence would have recourse, as to their natural protectors against · Thuan. 460, &c. Haræi Ann. Brab. 674.

Italy.

that

BOOK XI.

1554.

rialifts invade Picardy.

169

BOOK XI. 1554. Colmo di Medici's fchemes . with regard to Siena,

170

that abfolute authority which the Emperor had enabled him to usurp; he knew how odious he was to the French, on account of his attachment to the Imperial party, and he forefaw that, if they were permitted to gather ftrength in Siena, Tuscany would foon feel the effects of their resentment. For these reasons, he wifhed with the utmost folicitude for the expulfion of the French out of the Sienese, before they had time to establish themselves thoroughly in the country, or to receive fuch reinforcements from France as would render it dangerous to attack them. As this, however, was properly the Emperor's bufinefs, who was called by his interest as well as honour to dislodge those formidable intruders into the heart of his dominions, Cofmo laboured to throw the whole burden of the enterprife on him; and on that account had given no affiftance, during the former campaign, but by advancing fome fmall fums of money towards the payment of the Imperial troops.

He negociates with the Empe-TOT.

Bur as the defence of the Netherlands engroffed all the Emperor's attention, and his remittances into England had drained his treafury, it was obvious that his operations in Italy would be extremely feeble; and Cofmo plainly perceived, that if he himfelf did not take part openly 7 openly in the war, and act with vigour, the BOOK XI. French would scarcely meet with any annoyance. As his fituation rendered this refolution neceffary and unavoidable, his next care was to execute it in fuch a manner, that he might derive from it fome other advantage, befide that of driving the French out of his neighbourhood. With this view, he difpatched an envoy to Charles, offering to declare war against France, and to reduce Siena at his own charges, on condition that he fhould be repaid whatever he fhould expend in the enterprife, and be permitted to retain all his conquefts until his demands were fully fatisfied. Charles, to whom, at this juncture, the war against Siena was an intolerable burden, and who had neither expedient nor refource that could enable him to carry it on with proper vigour, closed gladly with this overture; and Cofmo, well acquainted with the low ftate of the Imperial finances, flattered himself that the Emperor, finding it impossible to reimburfe him, would fuffer him to keep quiet poffession of whatever places he should conquer<sup>d</sup>.

Full of these hopes, he made great prepara- Enters inte rations for war, and as the French King had turned the strength of his arms against the war with France.

<sup>d</sup> Adriani Istoria de suoi tempi, vol. i. 662.

Netherlands,

171

1554.

172

Воок XI.

1551-

Gives the command of his army to Medecino.

Netherlands, he did not despair of affembling fuch a body of men as would prove more than a fufficient match for any force which Henry could bring into the field in Italy. He endeavoured to obtain affiftance from the Pope, or at least to fecure his remaining neutral, by giving one of his daughters to that Pontiff's nephew. He attempted to detach the Duke of Orfini, whole family had been long attached to the French party, from his ancient confederates, by bestowing on him another of his daughters; and what was of greater confequence than either of thefe, he engaged John James Medecino, Marquis of Marignano, to take the command of his army °. This officer, from a very low condition in life, had raifed himfelf, through all the ranks of fervice, to high command, and had difplayed talents, and acquired reputation in war, which entitled him to be placed on a level with the greatefts general in that martial age. Having attained a station of eminence so disproportionate to his birth, he laboured with a fond folicitude to conceal his original obfcurity, by giving out that he was defcended of the family of Medici, to which honour the calual refemblance of his name was his only pretenfion. Cofmo, happy that he could gratify him at fuch an easy rate, flattered his vanity in this point, * Adriani Isloria, vol. i. p. 663.

acknowledged

acknowledged him as a relation, and permitted Book XI. him to affume the arms of his family: Medecino, eager to ferve the head of that family of which he now confidered himfelf as a branch, applied with wonderful zeal and affiduity to ralfe troops; and as, during his long fervice, he had acquired great credit with the leaders of those mercenary bands which formed the ftrength of Italian armies, he engaged the most eminent of them to follow Cofmo's standard.

To oppose this able general, and the formidable army which he had affembled, the King of France made choice of Peter Strozzi, a Florentine nobleman, who had refided long in France, as an exile, and who had rifen by his merit to high reputation, as well as command in the army. He was the fon of Philip Strozzi, who, in the year one thousand five hundred and thirty-feven, had concurred with fuch ardour in the attempt to expel the family of Medici, out of Florence, in order to re-establish the ancient republican form of government; and who had perished in the undertaking. The fon inherited the implacable averfion to the Medici, as well as the fame enthuliaftick zeal for the liberty of Florence which had animated his father, whole death he was impatient to revenge. Henry flattered himfelf that his army would make rapid progrefs under a general whofe zeal 10

Peter Strozzi entrufted with the command of the French army in Italy.

173

1554-

174

Воок XI. 1554. to promote his intereft was roufed and feconded by fuch powerful paffions; efpecially as he had allotted him, for the fcene of action, his native country, in which he had many powerful partifans ready to facilitate all his operations.

The imprudence of this choice.

BUT how fpecious foever the motives might appear which induced Henry to make this choice, it proved fatal to the interefts of France in Italy. Cofmo, as foon as he heard that the mortal enemy of his family was appointed to take the command in Tufcany, concluded that the King of France aimed at fomething more than the protection of the Sienefe, and faw the neceffity of making extraordinary efforts, not merely to reduce Siena, but to fave himfelf from deftruction<sup>f</sup>. At the fame time, the Cardinal of Ferrara, who had the entire direction of the French affairs in Italy, confidered Strozzi as a formidable rival in power, and in order to prevent his acquiring any increase of authority from fucces, he was extremely remifs in fupplying him either with money to pay his troops, or with provifions to fupport them. Strozzi himfelf, blinded by his refentment against the Medici, pushed on his operations with the impetuofity of revenge, rather than with the caution and prudence becoming a great general.

f Pecci Memorie di Siena, vol. iv. p. 103, &c.

AT

At first, however, he attacked feveral towns in the territory of Florence with fuch vigour as obliged Medecino, in order to check his progress, to withdraw the greater part of his army from Siena, which he had invefted before Strozzi's arrival in Italy. As Cofmo fuftained the whole burden of military operations, the expence of which must foon have exhausted his revenues; as neither the viceroy of Naples nor governor of Milan were in condition to afford him any effectual aid; and as the troops which Medecino had left in the camp before Siena could attempt nothing against it during his abfence; it was Strozzi's bufinefs to have protracted the war, and to have transferred the feat of it into the territories of Florence; but the hope of ruining his enemy by one decifive blow, precipitated him into a general engagement not far from Marciano. The armies were nearly equal in number; but a body of Italian cavalry, in which Strozzi placed great confidence, having fled without making any refiftance, either through the treachery or cowardice of the officers who commanded it, his infantry remained exposed to the attacks of all Medecino's troops. Encouraged, however, by Strozzi's prefence and example, who, after receiving a dangerous wound in endeavouring to rally the cavalry, placed himfelf at the head of the infantry, and manifefted 175

BOOK XI.

1554. The battle of Marciano.

August 3.

In which the Frence are defeated, 176

BOOK XI. 15:4.

fefted an admirable prefence of mind, as well as extraordinary valour, they ftood their ground with great firmnefs, and repulfed fuch of the enemy as ventured to approach them. But those gallant troops being furrounded at last on every fide, and torn in pieces by a battery of cannon which Medecino brought to bear upon them, the Florentine cavalry broke in on their flanks, and a general rout enfued. Strozzi, faint with the loss of blood, and deeply affected with the fatal confequences of his own rafhnefs, found the utmost difficulty in making his escape with a handful of men<sup>g</sup>.

Medecino befieges Siena, which is gallantly derended by the citizens and Monluc, MEDECINO returned immediately to the fiege of Siena with his victorious forces, and as Strozzi could not, after the greateft efforts of activity, collect as many men as to form the appearance of a regular army, he had leifure to carry on his approaches against the town without molestation. But the Sienese, instead of finking into despair upon this cruel disappointment of their only hope of obtaining relies, prepared to defend themselves to the utmost extremity, with that undaunted fortitude, which the love of liberty alone can infpire. This generous resolution was warmly seconded by Monluc, who commanded the French garrison in the town. The active and enterprifing courage Book XI. which he had difplayed on many occafions, had procured him this command; and as he had ambition which aspired at the highest military dignities, without any pretensions to attain them but what he could derive from merit, he determined to diftinguish his defence of Siena by extraordinary efforts of valour and perfeverance. For this purpose, he repaired and strengthened the fortifications with unwearied industry; he trained the citizens to the use of arms, and accuftomed them to go through the fatigues and dangers of fervice in common with the foldiers; and as the enemy were extremely ftrict in guarding all the avenues to the city, he hufbanded the provisions in the magazines with the most parfimonious æconomy, and prevailed on the foldiers, as well as the citizens, to reftrict themfelves to a very moderate daily allowance for their fubfistence. Medecino, though his army was not numerous enough to ftorm the town by open force, ventured twice to affault it by furprife; but he was received each time with fo much fpirit, and repulfed with fuch lofs, as difcouraged him from repeating the attempt, and left him no hopes of reducing the town but by famine.

8 Pecci Memorie della Siena, vol. iv. p. 157.

town.

VOL. IV.

WITH

N

177

1554.

BOOK XI.

1554. Medecino converts the fiege into a blockade.

WITH this view, he fortified his own camp with great care, occupied all the posts of strength round the place, and having entirely cut off the belieged from any communication with the adjacent country, he waited patiently until neceffity fhould compel them to open their gates. But their enthuliaftick zeal for liberty made the citizens despise the distresses occasioned by the fcarcity of provisions, and even supported them long under all the miferies of famine; Monluc, by his example and exhortations, taught his foldiers to vie with them in patience and abftinence; and it was not until they had withflood a fiege of ten months, until they had eaten up all the horfes, dogs, and other animals in the place, and were reduced almost to their last morfel of bread, that they proposed a capitulation. Even then they demanded honourable terms; and as Cofmo, though no ftranger to the extremity of their condition, was afraid that defpair might prompt them to venture upon fome wild enterprize, he immediately granted them conditions more favourable than they could have expected.

April 22. The town obliged by famine to sapitulate.

$555-

THE capitulation was made in the Emperor's name, who engaged to take the republick of Sienaunder the protection of the Empire; he promifed to maintain the ancient liberties of the city,

city, to allow the magistrates the full exercise of their former authority, to fecure the citizens in the undifturbed poffeffion of their privileges and property; he granted an ample and unlimited pardon to all who had born arms against him; he referved to himfelf the right of placing a garrifon in the town, but engaged not to rebuild the citadel without the confent of the citizens. Monluc and his French garrifon were allowed to march out with all the honours of war.

MEDECINO observed the articles of capitulation, as far as depended on him, with great exactnefs. No violence or infult whatever was offered to the inhabitants, and the French garrifon was treated with all the respect due to their spirit and bravery. But many of the citizens fufpecting, from the extraordinary facility with which they had obtained fuch favourable conditions, that the Emperor, as well as Cosmo, would take the first opportunity of violating them, and difdaining to poffefs a precarious liberty, which depended on the will of another, abandoned the place of their nativity, and accompanied the French to Monté-Alcino, Porto Ercole, and other fmall towns in the territory of the republick. They established, in Monté-Alcino, the fame model of government to which they had been accuftomed at Siena, and appointing ma-N 2 giftrates andestablish a free government there.

Many of the Sieneferetire to Monté-Alcino ;

179

BOOK XI. 1555.

180

Воок XI. 1555giftrates with the fame titles and jurifdicton, folaced themfelves with this image of their ancient liberty.

Hardfhips to which the citizens of Siena were fubjected.

THE fears of the Sienese concerning the fate of their country were not imaginary, or their fuspicion of the Emperor and Cosmo ill-founded; for no fooner had the Imperial troops taken poffeffion of the town, than Cofmo, without regarding the articles of capitulation, not only difplaced the magistrates who were in office, and nominated new ones devoted to his own intereft, but commanded all the citizens to deliver up their arms to perfons whom he appointed to receive them. They fubmitted to the former from neceffity, though with all the reluctance and regret which men accustomed to liberty feel in obeying the first commands of a master. They did not yield the fame tame obedience to the latter; and many perfons of diffinction, rather than degrade themselves from the rank of freemen to the condition of flaves, by furrendering their arms, fled to their countrymen at Monté-Alcino, and chofe to endure all the hardships, and encounter all the dangers which they had reason to expect in that new station, where they had fixed the feat of their republick.

Colmo attacks those who had retired. Cosmo, not reckoning himfelf fecure while fuch numbers of implacable and desperate enemies mies were fettled in his neighbourhood, and re- BOOK XI. tained any degree of power, folicited Medecino to attack them in their different places of retreat, before they had time to recruit their ftrength and spirits, after the many calamities which they had fuffered. He prevailed on him, though his army was much weakened by hard duty during the fiege of Siena, to invest Porto Ercole; and the fortifications being both flight and incomplete, the befieged were foon compelled to open their gates. An unexpected order, which Medecino received from the Emperor to detach the greater part of his troops into Piedmont, prevented farther operations, and permitted the Sienese exiles to refide for some time undisturbed in Monté-Alcino. But their unhappy countrymen who remained at Siena, were not yet at the end of their fufferings; for the Emperor, inftead of adhering to the articles of capitulation, granted his fon Philip the investiture of that city and all its dependencies; and Francis de Toledo, in the name of their new master, proceeded to fettle the civil and military government, treated them like a conquered people, and fubjected them to the Spanish yoke, without paying any regard whatever to their privileges or eftablished forms of policy h.

h Sleid. 617. Thuan. lib. xv. 526. 537. Joan. Camerarii adnot, rer. præcipuarum ab anno 1550 ad 1561 ap. Freherum, vol. iii. p. 564. Pecci Memorie della Siena, iv. 164, &c.

1555.

131

June 13.

Operations in Piedmont.

BOOK XI.

THE Imperial army in Piedmont had been fo feeble, for fome time, and its commanders fo inactive, that the Emperor, in order to give vigour to his operations in that quarter, found it neceffary not only to call off Medecino's troops from Tufcany while in the career of conqueft, but to employ in Piedmont a general of fuch reputation and abilities, as might counterbalance the great military talents of the Marechal Briffac, who was at the head of the French forces in that country.

Charles appoints the Duke of Alva generalifimo there,

HE pitched on the Duke of Alva for that purpole; but it was as much the effect of a court intrigue, as of his opinion of the Duke's merit, which led him to this choice. Alva had long attended Philip with the utmost affiduity, and had endeavoured to work himfelf into his confidence by all the infinuating arts of which his haughty and inflexible nature was capable. As he nearly refembled that Prince in many features of his character, he began to gain much of his good-will. Ruy Gomez de Silva, Philip's favourite, who dreaded the progrefs which this formidable rival made in his mafter's affections, had the address to prevail with the Emperor to name Alva to this command. The Duke, though fenfible that he owed this diffinction to the malicious arts of an enemy, who had no other aim than to remove him at a diftance from court. was was of fuch punctilious honour, that he would BOOK XI. not decline a command that appeared dangerous and difficult, but, at the fame time, fo haughty, that he would not accept of it but on his own terms, infifting on being appointed the Emperor's Vicar general in Italy, with the fupreme military command in all the Imperial and Spanish territories in that country. Charles granted all his demands; and he took poffeffion of his new dignity with almost unlimited authority.

. .

182

His first operations, however, were neither His operaproportioned to his former reputation and the inconfiderextensive powers with which he was invested, nor did they come up to the Emperor's expectations. Briffac had under his command an army which, though inferior in number to the Imperialists, was composed of chosen troops, which having grown old in fervice in that country, where every town was fortified, and every caftle capable of being defended, were perfectly acquainted with the manner of carrying on war there. By their valour, and his own good conduct, Briffac not only defeated all the attempts of the Imperialists, but added new conquests to the territories of which he was formerly master. Alva, after having boasted, with his ufual arrogance, that he would drive the French tions inere able.

out

1555.

183

Воок XI,

184

out of Piedmont in a few weeks, was obliged to retire into winter-quarters, with the ignominy of being unable to preferve entire that part of the country of which the Emperor had hitherto kept poffeffion<sup>1</sup>.

A confpiracy to betray Me'z to the Imperialist.

As the operations of this campaign in Piedmont were indecifive, those in the Netherlands were inconfiderable, neither the Emperor nor King of France being able to bring into the field an army ftrong enough to undertake any enterprize of moment. But what Charles wanted in force, he endeavoured to fupply by a bold ftratagem, the fuccefs of which would have been equal to that of the most vigorous campaign. During the fiege of Metz, Leonard Father Guardian of a convent of Franciscans in that city, had infinuated himfelf far into the effeem and favour of the Duke of Guife, by his attachment to the French. Being a man of an active and intriguing fpirit, he had been extremely useful both in animating the inhabitants to fuftain with patience all the hardships of the fiege, and in procuring intelligence of the enemies defigns and motions. The merit of those important fervices, together with the warm recommendations of the Duke of Guife, fecured him

<sup>3</sup> Thuan. lib. xv. 529. Guichenon Hift. de Savoye, tom. i. 6.0.

fuch

fuch high confidence with Vielleville, who was BOOK XI. appointed governor of Metz when Guife left the town, that he was permitted to converse or correfpond with whatever perfons he chofe, and nothing that he did created any fuspicion. This monk, from the levity natural to bold and projecting adventurers; or from refentment against the French, who had not bestowed on him fuch rewards as he thought due to his own merit; or tempted by the unlimited confidence which was placed in him, to imagine that he might carry on and accomplish any scheme with perfect fecurity, formed a defign of betraying Metz to the Imperialists.

HE communicated his intention to the The plan Queen-dowager of Hungary, who governed the Low Countries in name of her brother. She approving, without any fcruple, an act of treachery, from which the Emperor might derive fuch fignal advantage, affifted the Father Guardian in concerting the most proper plan for enfuring its fuccefs. They agreed, that the Father Guardian should endeavour to gain his monks to concur in promoting the defign; that he should introduce into the convent a certain number of chofen foldiers, difguifed in the habit of friars; that when every thing was ripe for execution, the governor of Thionville should march 1555.

185 1555.

186

BOOK XI. march towards Metz in the night with a confiderable body of troops, and attempt to fcale the ramparts; that while the garrifon was employed in refifting the affailants, the monks fhould fet fire to the town in different places; that the foldiers who lay concealed fhould fally out of the convent, and attack those who defended the ramparts in the rear. Amidst the univerfal terror and confusion, which events fo unexpected would occasion, it was not doubted but that the Imperialists might become masters of the town. As a recompence for this fervice the Father Guardian flipulated that he should be appointed bifhop of Metz, and ample rewards were promifed to fuch of his monks as fhould be most active in co-operating with him.

Its progrefs.

THE Father Guardian accomplished what he had undertaken to perform with great fecrecy and difpatch. By his authority and arguments, as well as by the profpect of wealth or honours which he fet before his monks, he prevailed on all of them to enter into the confpiracy. He introduced into the convent, without being fufpected, as many foldiers as were thought fufficient. The governor of Thionville, apprized in due time of the defign, had affembled a proper number of troops for executing it; and the moment approached, which probably would have have wrefted from Henry the most important Bo of all his conquests.

But, happily for France, on the very day that was fixed for ftriking the blow, Vielleville, an able and vigilant officer, received information from a fpy whom he entertained at Thionville, that certain Franciscan friars reforted frequently thither, and were admitted to many private conferences with the governor, who was carrying on preparations for fome military enterprize with great difpatch, but with a most mysterious fecrecy. This was fufficient to awaken Vielleville's fuspicions. Without communicating thefe to any perfon, he inftantly vifited the convent of Franciscans; detected the foldiers who were concealed there; and forced them to difcover as much as they knew concerning the nature of the enterprife. The Father Guardian, who had gone to Thionville that he might put the last hand to his machinations, was feized at the gate as he returned; and he, in order to fave himself from the rack, revealed all the circumstances of the conspiracy.

VIELLEVILLE not fatisfied with having feized the traitors, and having fruftrated their fchemes, was folicitous to take advantage of the difcoveries which he had made, fo as to be revenged on the Imperialifts. For this purpofe, he marched-

A body of Imperialifts defeated.

BOOK XI. 1555.

Is difcovered.

188 Воок XI.

1555.

marched out with the beft troops in his garriton, and placing thefe in ambuſh near the road, by which the Father Guardian had informed him that the governor of Thionville would approach Metz, he fell upon the Imperialiſts with great fury, as they advanced in perfect fecurity, without fuſpecting any danger to be near. Confounded at this fudden attack, by an enemy whom they expected to furpriſe, they made little reſiſtance; and a great part of the troops employed in this fervice, among which were many perfons of diſtinction, was killed or taken priſoners. Before next morning, Vielleville returned to Metz in triumph.

The confpirators punifhed. No refolution was taken for fome time concerning the fate of the Father Guardian and his monks, the framers and conductors of this dangerous confpiracy. Regard for the honour of a body fo numerous and refpectable as the Francifcans, and unwillingnefs to afford a fubject of triumph to the enemies of the Romifh church by their difgrace, feem to have occafioned this delay. But at length, the neceffity of inflicting exemplary punifhment upon them, in order to deter others from venturing to commit the fame crime, became fo evident, that orders were iffued to proceed to their trial. Their guilt was made apparent by the cleareft evidence; evidence; and fentence of death was paffed upon the Father Guardian together with twenty monks. On the evening previous to the day fixed for their execution, the jailor took them out of the dungeons in which they had hitherto been confined feparately, and fhut them all up in one great room, that they might confess their fins one to another, and join together in preparing for a future state. But as soon as they were left alone, inftead of employing themfelves in the religious exercifes fuitable to their condition, they began to reproach the Father Guardian, and four of the fenior monks who had been most active in feducing them, for their inordinate ambition, which had brought fuch mifery on them, and fuch difgrace upon their order. From reproaches they proceeded to curfes and execrations, and at last, in a frenzy of rage and defpair, they fell upon them with fuch violence, that they murdered the Father Guardian on the fpot, and fo difabled the other four, that it became necessary to carry them next morning in a cart, together with the dead body of the Father Guardian, to the place of execution. Six of the youngeft were pardoned, the reft fuffered the punishment which their crime merited <sup>k</sup>.

* Thuan. lib. xv. p. 522. Belear. Com. Rer. Gal. 856. Memoirs du Marech. Vielleville, par M. Charloix, tom. iii. p. 249, &c. p. 347. Par. 1757. THOUGH

Воок XI.

189

190

BOOK XI.

I555. A fruitless negociation in order to establish peace.

May 21.

THE REIGN OF THE

THOUGH both parties, exhausted by the length of the war, carried it on in this languishing manner, neither of them shewed any disposition to listen to overtures of peace. Cardinal Pole indeed laboured with all the zeal becoming his piety and humanity, to re-eftablish concord among the Princes of Christendom. He had not only perfuaded his miltrefs, the Queen of England, to enter warmly into his fentiments, and to offer her mediation to the contending powers, but had prevailed both on the Emperor and King of France to fend their plenipotentiaries to a village between Gravelines and Ardres. He himfelf, together with Gardiner bishop of Winchester, repaired thither in order to prefide as mediators in the conferences, which were to be held for adjusting all the points in difference. But though each of the monarchs committed this negociation to fome of their minifters, in whom they placed the greatest confidence, it was foon evident that they came together with no fincere defire of accommodation. Each proposed articles fo extravagant that they could have no hopes of their being accepted. Pole, after exerting, in vain, all his zeal, addrefs, and invention, in order to perfuade them to relinquish fuch extravagant demands, and to confent to the fubftitution of more equal conditions, became fenfible of the folly of wafting time.

time, in attempting to reconcile those, whom their obstinacy rendered irreconcilable, broke off the conference, and returned into England<sup>1</sup>.

DURING these transactions in other parts of Europe, Germany enjoyed fuch profound tranquillity, as afforded the Diet full leifure to deliberate, and to eftablish proper regulations concerning a point of the greatest consequence to the internal peace of the Empire. By the treaty of Paffau in one thousand five hundred and fifty-two, it had been referred to the next diet of the Empire to confirm and perfect the plan of religious pacification, which was there agreed upon. The terror and confusion with which the violent commotions excited by Albert of Brandenburg had filled the Empire, as well as the conftant attention which Ferdinand was obliged to give to the affairs of Hungary, had hitherto prevented the holding a diet, though it had been fummoned, foon after the conclusion of the treaty, to meet at Augfburg.

BUT as a Diet was now neceffary on many accounts, Ferdinand about the beginning of this year had repaired to Augfburg. Though few of the Princes were prefent either in perfon or Diet held at Augfburg, and Ferdinand's fpeech in it.

by

<sup>1</sup> Thuan. lib. xv. p. 523. Mem. de Ribier, com. ii. p. 613. BOOK XI. 1555.

Affairs of Germany.

191

by their deputies, he opened the affembly by a fpeech, in which he proposed a termination of the diffensions, to which the new tenets and controverfies with regard to religion had given rife, not only as the first and great business of the diet, but as the point which both the Emperor and he had most at heart. He represented the innumerable obstacles which the Emperor had to furmount before he could procure the convocation of a general council, as well as the fatal accidents which had for fome time retarded, and had at last suspended the confultations of that affembly. He observed, that experience had already taught them how vain it was to expect any remedy for evils, which demanded immediate redrefs, from a general council, the affembling of which would either be prevented, or its deliberations be interrupted by the diffenfions and hostilities of the Princes of Christendom; That a national council in Germany, which, as fome imagined, might be called with greater eafe, and deliberate with more perfect fecurity, was an affembly of an unprecedented nature, the jurifdiction of which was uncertain in its extent, and the form of its proceedings undefined; That in his opinion there remained but one method for composing their unhappy differences, which though it had been often tried without fuccefs, might yet prove effectual if

192 Воок XI.

1555-

if it were attempted with a better and more BOOK XI. pacifick spirit than had appeared on former occafions, and that was to choose a few men of learning, abilities, and moderation, who, by difcuffing the difputed articles in an amicable conference, might explain them in fuch a manner, as to bring the contending parties either to unite in fentiment, or to differ with charity.

THIS speech being printed in common form, Suspicions and difperfed over the Empire, revived the fears, of the Proand jealousies of the Protestants; Ferdinand, testants. they observed with much furprise, had not once mentioned, in his address to the diet, the treaty of Paffau, the flipulations in which they confidered as the great fecurity of their religious liberty. The fufpicions to which this gave rife were confirmed by the accounts which they daily received of the extreme rigour with which Ferdinand treated their Protestant brethren in his hereditary dominions, and, as it was natural to confider his actions as the fureft indication of his intentions, this diminished their confidence in those pompous professions of moderation or of zeal for the re-establishment of concord, to which his practice was fo utterly repugnant.

THE arrival of the Cardinal Morone, whom the Pope had appointed to attend the diet as his VOL. IV.

193 1555.

BOOK XI.

1555. Thele increafed by the arrival of a nuncio from the Pope to the diet.

his nuncio, completed their conviction, and left them no room to doubt that fome dangerous machination was forming against the peace or fafety of the Protestant church. Julius, elated with the unexpected return of the English nation from apostacy, began to flatter himfelf that, the fpirit of mutiny and revolt having now fpent its force, the happy period was come when the church might refume its ancient authority, and be obeyed by the people with the fame tame fubmiffion as formerly. Full of these hopes he had fent Morone to Augsburg, with inftructions to employ his eloquence in. order to excite the Germans to imitate the laudable example of the English, and his political address in order to prevent any decree of the diet to the detriment of the catholick faith. As Morone inherited from his father, the chancellor of Milan, uncommon talents for negociation and intrigue, he could hardly have failed of embarrassing the measures of the Protestants in the diet, or of defeating whatever they aimed at obtaining in it for their farther fecurity.

The death of Julius III. BUT an unforeseen event delivered them from all the danger which they had reason to apprehend from Morone's prefence. Julius, by abandoning himself to pleasures and amusements, no less unbecoming his age than his character, having contracted such habits of diffi-5 pation, pation, that any ferious occupation, especially Book XI. if attended with difficulty, became an intolerable burden to him, had long refifted the folicitations of his nephew to hold a confiftory, because he expected there a violent opposition to his schemes in favour of that young man. But when all the pretexts which he could invent for eluding this requeft were exhaufted, and at the fame time his indolent averfion to bufinefs continued to grow upon him, he feigned indifpolition rather than yield to his nephew's importunity; and that he might give the deceit a greater colour of probability, he not only confined himfelf to his apartment, but changed his ufual diet and manner of life. By perfifting too long in acting this ridiculous part, he contracted a real difease, of which he died in a few days, leaving his infamous minion the Cardinal de Montè to bear his name, and to difgrace the dignity which he had conferred upon him ". As foon as Morone heard of his death, he fet The nuncio out abruptly from Augfburg, where he had Rome. refided only a few days, that he might be prefent at the election of a new Pontiff.

194

195 1555.

March 23.

fets out for

ONE cause of their suspicions and fears being thus removed, the Protestants foon became fen-

Ferdinand's reasons for withing to fatisfy the Protestants,

<sup>m</sup> Onuphr. Panvinius de vitis Pontificum, p. 320. Thuan. lib. xv. 517.

O 2

fible

196

BOOK XI 1555.

fible that their conjectures concerning Ferdinand's intentions, however specious, were illfounded, and that he had no thoughts of violating the articles favourable to them in the treaty of Paffau. Charles, from the time that Maurice had defeated all his fchemes in the Empire, and overturned the great fystem of religious and civil defpotifm, which he had almost established there, gave little attention to the internal government of Germany, and permitted his brother to purfue whatever measures he judged moft falutary and expedient. Ferdinand, lefs ambitious and enterprifing than the Emperor, instead of refuming a plan, which he, with power and refources fo far fuperior, had failed of accomplishing, endeavoured to attach the Princes of the Empire to his family by an administration uniformly moderate and equitable. To this he gave, at prefent, particular attention, becaufe his fituation at this juncture rendered it necessary to court their favour and fupport with more than usual affiduity.

Charles had refumed his plan of altering the fucceffion to the Empire.

CHARLES had again refumed his favourite project of acquiring the Imperial crown for his fon Philip, which the ill reception it had met with when first proposed had obliged him to intermit, but had not perfuaded him to relinquifh. This led him warmly to renew his request 1

. . . .

requeft to his brother that he would accept of fome compenfation for his prior right of fucceffion, and facrifice that to the grandeur of the houfe of Auftria. Ferdinand, who was as little difpofed, as formerly, to give fuch an extraordinary proof of felf denial, being fenfible that, in order to defeat this fcheme, not only the most inflexible firmnefs on his part, but a vigorous declaration from the Princes of the Empire in behalf of his title, were requifite; was willing to purchafe their favour by gratifying them in every point that they deemed interefting or effential.

On the other hand, the Turks, after having wrefted from him great part of his Hungarian territories, were ready to attack the provinces ftill fubject to his authority with a formidable army, againft which he could bring no equal force into the field, unlefs the diet fhould grant him immediate and extraordinary aid. For this he could not hope, if the internal peace of the Empire were not eftablifhed on a foundation folid in itfelf, and which fhould appear, even to the Proteftants, fo fecure and fo permanent, as might not only allow them to engage in a diftant war with fafety, but encourage them to act with vigour.

The Turks were ready to invade Hungary.

197

BOOK XI.

03

A STEP

198

BOOK XI.

¥555. He isalarmed at fome fteps taken by the Proteftants.

THE REIGN OF THE

A STEP taken by the Protestants themselves, a short time after the opening of the diet, rendered him still more cautious of giving them any new cause of offence. As soon as the publication of Ferdinand's speech awakened the fears and sufficients which have been mentioned, the Electors of Saxony and Brandenburg, together with the Landgrave of Hesse, met at Naumburgh, and confirming the ancient treaty of confraternity which had long united their families, they added to it a new article, by which the contracting parties bound themselves to adhere to the confession of Augsburg, and to maintain the doctrine which it contained in their respective dominions ".

Ferdinand zealous to promote an accommodation. FERDINAND, influenced by all thefe confiderations, employed his utmoft addrefs in conducting the deliberations of the diet, fo as not to excite the jealoufy of a party on whofe friendfhip he depended, and whofe enmity, as they had not only taken the alarm, but had begun to prepare for their defence, he had fo much reafon to dread. The members of the diet readily agreed to Ferdinand's propofal of taking the ftate of religion into confideration, previous to any other bufinefs. But, as foon as they entered upon it, both parties difcovered all the zeal and animofity which a fubject fo interesting BOOK XI. naturally engenders, and which the rancour of controverfy, together with the violence of civil war, had inflamed to the highest pitch.

* Chytræi Saxonia, 480.

THE Protestants contended, that the fecurity The pretenwhich they claimed in confequence of the treaty Catholicks of Paffau should extend, without limitation, to tants. all who had hitherto embraced the doctrine of Luther, or who should hereafter embrace it. The Catholicks, having first of all afferted the Pope's right as the fupreme and final judge with respect to all articles of faith, declared that though, on account of the prefent fituation of the Empire, and for the fake of peace, they were willing to confirm the toleration granted, by the treaty of Paffau, to fuch as had adopted the new opinions; they must infist that this indulgence fhould not be extended either to those cities which had conformed to the Interim, or to fuch ecclefiafticks as fhould for the future apostatize from the church of Rome. It was no eafy matter to reconcile fuch opposite pretenfions, which were fupported, on each fide, by the most elaborate arguments, and the greatest acrimony of expression, that the abilities or zeal of theologians long exercifed in difputation could fuggeft. Ferdinand, however, by his address and perfeverance; by foftening fome things on each fide; by putting a favourable meaning upon others; by reprefenting incef-04 fantly

1555.

199

fions of the and Protef-

200

Воок X!. 1555. fantly the neceffity as well as the advantages of concord; and by threatening, on fome occafions, when all other confiderations were difregarded, to diffolve the diet, brought them at length to a conclusion in which they all agreed.

Sept. 25. The peace of religion eftablished.

CONFORMABLY to this, a Recefs was framed, approved of, and published with the usual formalities. The following are the chief articles which it contained: That fuch Princes and cities as have declared their approbation of the Confession of Augsburg, shall be permitted to profess the doctrine and exercise the worship which it authorifes, without interruption or moleftation from the Emperor, the King of the Romans, or any power or perfon whatfoever; That the Protestants, on their part, shall give no difquiet to the Princes and States who adhere to the tenets and rites of the Church of Rome; That, for the future, no attempt shall be made towards terminating religious differences, but by the gentle and pacifick methods of perfuafion and conference; That the Popifh ecclefiafticks shall claim no spiritual jurisdiction in such states as receive the Confession of Augsburg; That fuch as had feized the benefices or revenues of the church, previous to the treaty of Paffau, fhall retain poffeffion of them, and be liable to no profecution in the Imperial chamber on that account; That the fupreme civil power in every every flate fhall have right to effablish what form of doctrine and worship it shall deem proper, and if any of its subjects refuse to conform to these, shall permit them to remove with all their effects wherever they please; That if any prelate or ecclesiastick shall hereaster abandon the Romish religion, he shall instantly relinquish his diocese or benefice, and it shall be lawful for those in whom the right of nomination is vested, to proceed immediately to an election, as if the office were vacant by death or translation, and to appoint a fuccessor of undoubted attachment to the ancient system of the state of the state of the system of the syst

SUCH are the capital articles in this famous Recefs, which is the bafis of religious peace in Germany, and the bond of union among its various flates, the fentiments of which are fo extremely different with refpect to points the most interesting as well as important. In our age and nation, to which the idea of Toleration is familiar, and its beneficial effects well known, it may feem strange, that a method of terminating their diffensions, fo fuitable to the mild and charitable spirit of the Christian religion, did not specified to the contending parties. But this expedient, however falutary, was fo repugnant to the fentiments and practice of • Sleid. 620. F. Paul, 368. Pallav. P. 11. 161. Christians

Reflections on the progrefs of the principles of toleration.

Воок XI.

202

1555.

BOOK XI. Chriftians during many ages, that it did not lie obvious to difcovery. Among the ancient heathens, all whofe deities were local and tutelary, diverfity of fentiment concerning the object or rites of religious worship feems to have been no fource of animolity, because the acknowledging veneration to be due to any one God, did not imply denial of the existence or the power of any other God; nor were the modes and rites of worship established in one country incompatible with those which other nations approved of and obferved. Thus the errors in their fyftem of theology were of fuch a nature as to be productive of concord; and notwithstanding the amazing number of their deities, as well as the infinite variety of their ceremonies, a fociable and tolerating fpirit fubfifted almost universally in the pagan world.

> BUT when the Christian revelation declared one Supreme Being to be the fole object of religious veneration, prefcribed the form of worfhip most acceptable to him, whoever admitted the truth of it held, of confequence, every other mode of religion to be abfurd and impious. Hence the zeal of the first converts to the Chriftian faith in propagating its doctrines, and the ardour with which they laboured to overturn every other form of worship. They employed, however, for this purpofe no methods but fuch as fuited the nature of religion. By the force BOOK XI. of powerful arguments, they convinced the understandings of men; by the charms of fuperior virtue, they allured and captivated their hearts. At length the civil power declared in favour of Chriftianity; and though numbers, imitating the example of their fuperiors, crowded into the church, many still adhered to their ancient fuperftitions. Enraged at their obstinacy, the minifters of religion, whole zeal was still unabared, though their fanctity and virtue were much diminished, forgot so far the nature of their own miffion, and of the arguments which they ought to have employed, that they armed the Imperial power against these unhappy men, and as they could not perfuade, they tried to compel them to believe.

AT the fame time, controverfies concerning articles of faith multiplied, from various causes, among Chriftians themfelves, and the fame unhallowed weapons which had first been used against the enemies of their religion, were turned against each other. Every zealous disputant endeavoured to interest the civil magistrate in his cause, and each in his turn employed the fecular arm to crush or to exterminate his opponents. Not long after, the bishops of Rome put in their claim to infallibility in explaining articles 203

1555.

204

1555.

BOOK XI. articles of faith, and deciding points in controverfy; and, bold as the pretention was, they, by their artifices and perfeverance, imposed on the credulity of mankind, and brought them to recognise it. To doubt or to deny any doctrine to which thefe unerring inftructors had given the fanction of their approbation, was held to be not only a refifting of truth, but an act of rebellion against their facred authority : and the fecular power, of which by various arts they had acquired the abfolute direction, was inftantly employed to avenge both.

> THUS Europe had been accustomed, during many centuries, to fee speculative opinions propagated or defended by force ; the charity and mutual forbearance which Christianity recommends with fo much warmth, were forgotten, the facred rights of confcience and of private judgment were unheard of, and not only the idea of toleration, but even the word itfelf, in the fense now affixed to it, was unknown. A right to extirpate error by force, was univerfally allowed to be the prerogative of fuch as poffeffed the knowledge of truth; and as each party of Christians believed that they had got posselfion of this invaluable attainment, they all claimed and exercifed, as far as they were able, the rights which it was fuppofed to convey. The Roman catholicks, as their fyftem refted on the decifions of an infallible judge, never doubted Book XI. that truth was on their fide, and openly called on the civil power to repell the impious and heretical innovators who had rifen up against it. The Protestants, no less confident that their doctrine was well founded, required, with equal ardour, the Princes of their party to check fuch as prefumed to impugn or to oppose it. Luther, Calvin, Cranmer, Knox, the founders of the reformed church in their respective countries, inflicted, as far as they had power and opportunity, the fame punishments which were denounced against their own disciples by the church of Rome, upon fuch as called in queftion any article in their creeds. To their followers, and perhaps to their opponents, it would have appeared a fymptom of diffidence in the goodness of their cause, or an acknowledgment that it was not well founded, if they had not employed in its defence all those means which it was supposed truth had a right to employ.

the

IT was towards the close of the feventeenth century, before Toleration, under its prefent form, was admitted first into the republick of the United Provinces, and from thence introduced into England. Long experience of the calamities flowing from mutual perfecution, the influence of free government, the light and humanity acquired by the progress of science, together with 205 1555.

BOOK XI. 1555.

206

with the prudence and authority of the civil magiftrate, were all requifite in order to eftablifh a regulation, fo repugnant to the ideas which all the different fects had adopted, from miftaken conceptions concerning the nature of religion and the rights of truth, or which all of them had derived from the erroneous maxims eftablifhed by the church of Rome.

Advantages of the religious peace to the Lutherans;

THE Recess of Augsburg, it is evident, was founded on no fuch liberal and enlarged fentiments concerning freedom of religious inquiry or the nature of Toleration. It was nothing more than a scheme of pacification, which political confiderations alone had fuggefted to the contending parties, and regard for their mutual tranquillity and fafety had rendered neceffary. Of this there can be no ftronger proof than an article in the Recess itself, by which the benefits of the pacification are declared to extend only to the Catholicks on the one fide, and to fuch as adhered to the confession of Augsburg on the other. The followers of Zuinglius and Calvin remained, in confequence of that exclusion, without any protection from the rigour of the laws denounced against hereticks. Nor did they obtain any legal fecurity, until the treaty of Westphalia, near a century after this period, provided, that they fhould be admitted to enjoy, in in as ample a manner as the Lutherans, all the Book XI. advantages and protection which the Receis of Augíburg affords.

BUT if the followers of Luther were highly and to the pleafed with the fecurity which they acquired by this Recess, fuch as adhered to the ancient fystem had no lefs reason to be fatisfied with that article in it, which preferved entire to the Roman catholick church the benefices of fuch ecclefiafticks as fhould hereafter renounce its doctrines. This article, known in Germany by the name of the Ecclesiastical Reservation, was apparently fo conformable to the idea and to the rights of an eftablished church, and it feemed fo equitable to prevent revenues, which had been originally appropriated for the maintenance of perfons attached to a certain fyftem, from being alienated to any other purpofe, that the Protestants, though they forefaw its confequences, were obliged to relinquish their oppofition to it. As the Roman catholick Princes of the Empire have taken care to fee this article exactly observed in every case where there was an opportunity of putting it in execution, it has proved the great barrier of the Romish church in Germany against the Reformation; and as, from this period, the fame temptation of interest did not allure ecclefiasticks to relinquish the establifhed

1555.

Catholicks.

207

BOOK XI.

1555.

blifhed fyftem, there have been few of that order, who have loved truth with fuch difinterefted and ardent affection, as for its fake to abandon the rich benefices which they had in poffeffion.

Marcellus II. elected Pope. April 9.

His character.

His death.

DURING the fitting of the diet, Marcellus Cervino, Cardinal of Santo Croce, was elected Pope in room of Julius. He, in imitation of Adrian, did not change his name on being exalted to the papal chair. As he equalled that Pontiff in purity of intention, while he excelled him much in the arts of government, and ftill more in knowledge of the ftate and genius of the papal court; as he had capacity to difcern what reformation it needed, as well as what it could bear; fuch regulations were expected from his virtue and wildom, as would have removed many of its groffeft and most flagrant corruptions, and have contributed towards reconciling to the church, fuch as from indignation at these enormities had abandoned its communion. But this excellent Pontiff was only shown to the church, and immediately snatched away. The confinement in the conclave had impaired his health, and the fatigue of tedious ceremonies upon his acceffion, together with too intenfe and anxious application of mind to the fchemes of improvement which he meditated, exhaufted exhausted to entirely the vigour of his feeble Book XI. conftitution, that he fickened on the twelfth, and died on the twentieth day after his election P.

208

ALL the refinements in artifice and intrigue, Theelection peculiar to conclaves, were difplayed in that which was held for electing a fucceffor to Marcellus; the Cardinals of the Imperial and French factions labouring, with equal ardour, to gain the neceffary number of fuffrages for one of their own party. But, after a ftruggle of no long duration, though conducted with all the warmth and eagerness natural to men contending for fo great an object, they united in chufing John Peter Caraffa, the eldeft member of the facred college, and the fon of Count Montorio, a nobleman of an illustrious family in the kingdom of Naples. The address and influence of Cardinal Farnefe, who favoured his pretenfions. Caraffa's own merit, and perhaps his great age, which foothed all the difappointed candidates, with the near profpect of a new vacancy, concurred in bringing about this fpeedy union of fuffrages. In order to teftify his respect for the memory of Paul III. by whom he had been created Cardinal, as well as his gratitude to the family of Farnefe, he affumed the name of Paul IV.

P 'Thuan. 520. F. Paul. 365. Onuph. Panvin. 321, &c. VOL. IV. P THE May 23.

209

1555.

of Paul IV.

BOOK XI. .1555. His rife and character.

210

THE choice of a prelate of fuch a fingular character, and who had long held a courfe extremely different from that which ufually led to the dignity now conferred upon him, filled the Italians, who had nearest access to observe his manners and deportment, with aftonifhment, and kept them in suspense and folicitude with regard to his future conduct. Paul, though born in a rank of life which, without any other merit, might have fecured to him the higheft ecclefiaftical preferments, had from his early years applied to fludy with all the affiduity of a man, who had nothing but his perfonal accomplishments to render him conspicuous. By means of this he not only acquired profound skill in scholastick theology, but added to that a confiderable knowledge of the learned languages and of polite literature, the fludy of which had been lately revived in Italy, and was purfued at this time with great ardour. His mind, however, naturally gloomy and fevere, was more formed to imbibe the four spirit of the former, than to receive any tincture of elegance or liberality of fentiment from the latter; fo that he acquired rather the qualities and paffions of a recluse ecclesiaftick, than the talents neceffary for the conduct of great affairs. Accordingly, when he entered into orders, although feveral rich benefices were bestowed upon him, and he was early employed as nuncio in different ferent courts, he foon became difgusted with Book XI. that course of life, and languished to be in a fituation more fuited to his tafte and temper. With this view he refigned at once all his ecclefiaftical preferments, and having inftituted an order of regular priefts, whom he denominated Theatines, from the name of the archbishoprick which he had held, he affociated himfelf as a member of their fraternity, conformed to all the rigorous rules to which he had fubjected them, and preferred the folitude of a monastick life, with the honour of being the founder of a new order, to all the vaft objects which the court of Rome prefented to his ambition.

In this retreat he remained for many years, until Paul III. induced by the fame of his fanctity and knowledge, called him to Rome, in order to confult with him concerning the measures which might be most proper and effectual for the fuppreffing of herefy, and reeftablishing the ancient authority of the church. Having thus allured him from his folitude, the Pope, partly by his entreaties, and partly by his authority, prevailed on him to accept of a Cardinal's hat, to re-affume the benefices which he had refigned, and to return again into the ufual path of ecclefiaftical ambition which he feemed to have relinquished. But, during two fucceffive Pontificates, under the first of which the 1555-

211

P 2

212

1555.

the court of Rome was the most artful and inte-BOOK XI. refted, and under the fecond the most diffolute of any in Europe, Caraffa retained his monaftick aufterity. He was an avowed and bitter enemy not only of all innovation in opinion, but of every irregularity in practice; he was the chief inftrument in eftablishing the formidable and odious tribunal of the Inquifition in the papal territories; he appeared a violent advocate on all occasions for the jurifdiction and difcipline of the church, and a fevere cenfurer of every measure which feemed to flow from motives of policy or interest, rather than from zeal for the honour of the ecclefiaftical order, and the dignity of the Holy See. Under a prelate of fuch a character, the Roman courtiers expected a fevere and violent Pontificate, during which the principles of found policy would be facrificed to the narrow prejudices of prieftly zeal; while the people of Rome were apprehenfive of feeing the fordid and forbidding rigour of monastick manners substituted in place of the gaiety or magnificence to which they had long been accuftomed in the papal court. Thefe apprehenfions Paul was extremely folicitous to remove. At his first entrance upon the adminiftration he laid afide that aufterity which had hitherto diftinguished his perfon and family, and when the mafter of his household inquired in what manner he would chuse to live, he haughti-

The firft fleps of his administration.

ly

ly replied, " As becomes a great Prince." He ordered the ceremony of his coronation to be conducted with more than ufual magnificence; and endeavoured to render himfelf popular by feveral acts of liberality and indulgence towards the inhabitants of Rome 9.

His natural feverity of temper, however, The excels would have foon returned upon him, and would tachment have justified the conjectures of the courtiers, phews, as well as the fears of the people, if he had not, immediately after his election, called to Rome two of his nephews, the fons of his brother the Count of Montorio. The eldeft he promoted to be governor of Rome. The youngeft, who had hitherto ferved as a foldier of fortune in the armies of Spain or France, and whofe difpolition as well as manners were still more foreign from the clerical character than his profession, he created a Cardinal, and appointed him legate of Bologna, the fecond office in power and dignity which a Pope can bestow. These marks of favour, no less sudden than extravagant, he accompanied with the most unbounded confidence and attachment, and forgetting all his former fevere maxims, he feemed to have no other object than the aggrandizing

A Platina, p. 327. Castaldo Vita di Paolo IV, Rom. 1615. p. 70.

of his at-

P 3

213 BOOK XI.

I 555. Their ambitious projects.

of his nephews. Their ambition, unfortunately for Paul, was too afpiring to be fatisfied with any moderate acquifition. They had feen the family of Medici raifed by the intereft of the Popes of that house to supreme power in Tufcany; Paul III. had by his abilities and addrefs fecured the dutchies of Parma and Placentia to the family of Farnefe. They aimed at fome establishment for themselves, no less considerable and independent; and as they could not expect that the Pope would carry his indulgence towards them fo far as to fecularize any part of the patrimony of the church, they had no profpect of attaining what they wished, but by difmembering the Imperial dominions in Italy, in hopes of feizing fome portion of them. This alone they would have deemed a fufficient reafon for fowing the feeds of difcord between their uncle and the Emperor.

Reafons of their difguft with the Emperor. But Cardinal Caraffa had, befides, private reafons which filled him with hatred and enmity to the Emperor. While he ferved in the Spanifhtroops he had not received fuch marks of honour and diftinction as he thought due to his birth and merit. Difgufted with this ill-ufage, he had abruptly quitted the Imperial fervice; and entering into that of France, he had not only met with fuch a reception as foothed his vanity, vanity, and attached him to the French intereft, BOOK XI but by contracting an intimate friendship with Strozzi, who commanded the French army in Tufcany, he had imbibed a mortal antipathy to the Emperor as the great enemy to the liberty and independence of the Italian states. Nor was the Pope himfelf indifpofed to receive impreffions unfavourable to the Emperor. The opposition given to his election by the Cardinals of the Imperial faction, left in his mind deep resentment, which was heightened by the remembrance of ancient injuries from Charles or his minifters.

214 Воок XI.

OF this his . nephews took advantage, and employed various devices, in order to exafperate him beyond a poffibility of reconciliation. They aggravated every circumstance which could be deemed any indication of the Emperor's diffatisfaction with his promotion; they read to him an intercepted letter, in which Charles taxed the Cardinals of his party with negligence or incapacity in not having defeated Paul's election: They pretended, at one time, to have difcovered a confpiracy formed by the Imperial minister and Cofmo di Medici against the Pope's life; they alarmed him, at another, with accounts of a plot for affaffinating themfelves. By thefe artifices, they kept his mind, which was naturally 215 15.55.

They endeavour to alienate the Pope from the Emperor.

Воок XI. 4555. rally violent, and become fufpicious from old age, in fuch perpetual agitation, as precipitated him into meafures, which otherwife he would have been the first perfon to condemn+. He feized fome of the Cardinals who were most attached to the Emperor, and confined them in the castle of St. Angelo; he perfecuted the Colonnas and other Roman barons, the ancient retainers to the Imperial faction, with the utmost feverity; and discovering on all occasions his distrust, fear, or hatred of the Emperor, he began at last to court the friendship of the French King, and feemed willing to throw himfelf absolutely upon him for support and protection.

Induce him to court the King of France.

THIS was the very point to which his nephews wifhed to bring him as moft favourable to their ambitious fchemes; and as the accomplifhment of thefe depended on their uncle's life, whofe advanced age did not admit of lofing a moment unneceffarily in negociations, inftead of treating at fecond hand with the French ambaffador at Rome, they prevailed on the Pope to difpatch a perfon of confidence directly to the court of France, with fuch overtures on his part as they hoped would not be rejected. He proposed an Book XI. alliance offenfive and defenfive between Henry and the Pope; that they fhould attack the dutchy of Tuscany and the kingdom of Naples with their united forces; and if their arms should prove fuccessful, that the ancient republican form of government fhould be re-eftablifhed in the former, and the inveftiture of the latter should be granted to one of the French King's fons, after referving a certain territory which should be annexed to the patrimony of the church, together with an independent and princely establishment for each of the Pope's nephews.

<sup>r</sup> Ripamontii Hilt. Patriæ, lib. iii. 1146. Ap. Græv. Thef. vol. ii. Mem. de Ribier, ii. 615. Adriani Islor. i. 906.

hoped

216

THE King, allured by thefe fpecious projects, gave a most favourable audience to the envoy. But when the matter was proposed in council, the conftable Montmorency, whofe natural caution and averfion to daring enterprifes increafed with age and experience, remonstrated with great vehemence against the alliance. He put Henry in mind how fatal to France every expedition into Italy had been during three fucceffive reigns, and if fuch an enterprife had proved too great for the nation even when its ftrength and finances were entire, there was no reafon to hope for fuccefs, if it fhould be attempted now when both were exhausted by extraordinary efforts

Constable Montmorency oppofes the alliance with the Pope.

217

218

BOOK XI. 1555.

efforts during wars, which had lasted, with little interruption, almost half a century. He reprefented the manifest imprudence of entering into engagagements with a Pope of fourfcore, as any fystem which rested on no better foundation than his life, must be extremely precarious, and upon the event of his death, which could not be diftant, the face of things, together with the inclination of the Italian States, must instantly change, and the whole weight of the war be left upon the King alone. To these confiderations he added the near prospect which they now had of a final accommodation with the Emperor, who having taken the refolution of retiring from the world, wished to transmit his kingdoms in peace to his fon; and he concluded with reprefenting the abfolute certainty of drawing the arms of England upon France, if it should appear that the re-establishment of tranquillity in Europe was prevented by the ambition of its Monarch.

The duke of Guife favours it.

THESE arguments, weighty in themfelves, and urged by a minister of great authority, would probably have determined the King to decline any connexion with the Pope. But the Duke of Guife and his brother the Cardinal of Lorrain, who delighted no lefs in bold and dangerous undertakings than Montmorency fhunned fhunned them, declared warmly for an alliance with the Pope. The cardinal expected to be entrusted with the conduct of the negociations in the court of Rome to which this alliance would give rife; the duke hoped to obtain the command of the army which would be appointed to invade Naples; and confidering themfelves as already in these stations, vast projects opened to their afpiring and unbounded ambition. Their credit, together with the influence of the King's miftrefs, the famous Diana of Poitiers, who was, at that time, entirely devoted to the interest of the family of Guise, more than counterbalanced all Montmorency's prudent remonstrances, and prevailed on an inconfiderate Prince to liften to the overtures of the Pope's envoy.

THE cardinal of Lorrain, as he had expected, Cardinal of was immediately fent to Rome with full powers to conclude the treaty, and to concert meafures for carrying it into execution. Before he could reach that city, the Pope, either from reflecting on the danger and uncertain iffue of all military operations, or through the address of the Imperial ambaffador, who had been at great pains to footh him, had not only begun to lofe much of the ardour with which he had fet on foot the negociation with France, but even difcovered great unwillingnefs

Lorrain fent to negociate with the Pope.

219

BOOK XI. 1555.

220

Воок XI. 1555.

unwillingnefs to continue it. In order to roufe him from this fit of defpondency, and to rekindle his former rage, his nephews had recourfe to the arts which they had already practifed with fo much fuccefs. They alarmed him with new reprefentations of the Emperor's hoftile intentions, with fresh accounts which they had received of threats uttered against him by the Imperial ministers, and with new discoveries which they pretended to have made of confpiracies formed, and just ready to take effect against his life.

Paul enraged at the proceedings of the diet of Augfburg;

BUT these artifices, having been formerly tried, would not have operated a fecond time with the fame force, nor have made the impreffion which they wished, if Paul had not been excited by an offence of that kind which he was leaft able to bear. He received advice of the recess of the diet of Augsburg, and of the toleration which was thereby granted to the Protestants, and this threw him at once into fuch transports of passion against the Emperor and King of the Romans, as carried him headlong into all the violent measures of his nephews. Full of high ideas with respect to the papal prerogative, and animated with the fiercest zeal against herefy, he confidered the liberty of deciding concerning religious matters, which had been been affumed by an affembly composed chiefly BOOK XI. of laymen, as a prefumptuous and unpardonable encroachment on that jurifdiction which belonged to him alone; and regarded the indulgence which had been given to the Protestants as an impious act of that power which the Diet had usurped. He complained loudly of both to the Imperial ambaffador. He infifted that the receis of the Diet should immediately be declared illegal and void. He threatened the Emperor and King of the Romans, in cafe they should either refuse or delay to gratify him in this particular, with the feverest effects of his vengeance. He talked in a tone of authority and command which might have fuited a pontiff of the twelfth century, when a papal decree was fufficient to have fhaken, or to have overturned the throne of the greatest Monarch, but which was altogether improper in that age, especially when addreffed to the minister of a Prince who had fo often made Pontiffs more formidable feel the weight of his power. The ambaffador, however, heard all his extravagant propolitions and menaces with much patience, and endeavoured to footh him by putting him in mind of the extreme diffress to which the Emperor was reduced at Infpruck, of the en. gagements which he had come under to the Protestants in order to extricate himself, of the neceffity .

2211

THE REIGN OF THE neceffity of fulfilling thefe, and of accommo-

222

BOOK XI.

dating his conduct to the fituation of his affairs. 1555. But weighty as thefe confiderations were, they made no impreffion on the mind of the haughty and bigotted pontiff, who inftantly replied, That he would abfolve him by his apostolick authority from those impious engagements, and even command him not to perform them; that in carrying on the caufe of God and of the church, no regard ought to be had to the maxims of worldly prudence and policy; and that the ill fuccefs of the Emperor's fchemes in Germany might justly be deemed a mark of the divine difpleafure against him, on account of his having paid little attention to the former, while he regulated his conduct entirely by the latter. Having faid this, he turned from the ambaffador abruptly without waiting for a reply.

and exafperared by his nephews,

· His nephews took care to applaud and cherifh these fentiments, and eafily wrought up his arrogant mind, fraught with all the monkish ideas concerning the extent of the papal supremacy, to fuch a pitch of refentment against the house of Austria, and to such an high opinion of his own power, that he talked continually of his being the fucceffor of those who had depofed Kings and Emperors; that he was exalted as head over them all, and would trample fuch

as

as oppofed him under his feet. In this difpofition, the cardinal of Lorrain found the Pope, and eafily perfuaded him to fign a treaty, which had for its object the ruin of a Prince againft whom he was fo highly exafperated. The ftipulations in the treaty were much the fame as had been propofed by the Pope's envoy at Paris; and it was agreed to keep the whole transfaction fecret until their united forces should be ready to take the field '.

DURING the negociation of this treaty at Rome and Paris, an event happened which feemed to render the fears which had given rife to it vain, and the operations which were to follow upon it unneceffary. This was the Emperor's refignation of his hereditary dominions to his fon Philip; together with his refolution to withdraw entirely from any concern in bufinefs or the affairs of this world, in order that he might spend the remainder of his days in retirement and folitude. Though it requires neither deep reflection nor extraordinary difcernment to discover that the state of royalty is not exempt from cares and difappointment; though most of those who are exalted to a throne find folicitude, and fatiety, and difgust to be their

<sup>5</sup> Pallav. lib. xiii. p. 163. F. Paul, 365. Thuan. lib. xv. 525. lib. xvi. 540. Mem. de Ribier, ii. 609, &c.

perpetual

BOOK XI.

I 555. Dec. 15. concludes a treaty with France.

The Emperor refolves to refign his hereditary dominions, perpetual attendants in that envied pre-eminence, yet, to descend voluntarily from the fupreme to a fubordinate station, and to relinquish the possession of power in order to attain the enjoyment of happiness, feems to be an effort too great for the human mind. Several inftances, indeed, occur in hiftory, of Monarchs who have quitted a throne, and have ended their days in retirement. But they were either weak Princes who took this refolution rafhly, and repented of it as foon as it was taken; or unfortunate Princes from whofe hands fome ftrong rival had wrefted their fceptre, and compelled them to defcend with reluctance into a private ftation. Dioclefian is perhaps the only Prince capable of holding the reins of government, who ever refigned them from deliberate choice, and who continued during many years to enjoy the tranquillity of retirement without fetching one penitent figh, or cafting back one look of defire, towards the power or dignity which he had abandoned.

224

Воок XI. 1555.

The motives of this refignation. No wonder, then, that Charles's refignation fhould fill all Europe with aftonifhment, and give rife, both among his contemporaries, and among the hiftorians of that period, to various conjectures concerning the motives which determined a Prince, whofe ruling paffion had been uniformly uniformly the love of power, at the age of fifty. Book XI. fix, when objects of ambition operate with full force on the mind, and are purfued with the greatest ardour, to take a refolution fo fingular and unexpected. But while many authors have imputed it to motives fo frivolous and fantaftical, as can hardly be fuppofed to influence any reasonable mind; while others have imagined it to be the refult of fome profound fcheme of policy; hiftorians more intelligent, and better informed, neither afcribe it to caprice, nor fearch for myflerious fecrets of ftate, where fimple and obvious causes will fully account for the Emperor's conduct. Charles had been attacked early in life with the gout, and notwithstanding all the precautions of the most skilful physicians, the violence of the diftemper increased as he advanced in age, and the fits became every year more frequent, as well as more intolerable. Not only was the vigour of his conftitution broken, but the faculties of his mind were impaired by the excruciating torments which he endured. During the continuance of the fits, he was altogether incapable of applying to bulinefs, and even when they began to abate, as it was only at intervals that he could attend to what was ferious, he gave up a great part of his time to trifling and even childifh occupations, which ferved to relieve or to amuse his mind, enfeebled and worn out with excels of pain. Under VOL. IV. thefe 0

225

BOOK XI.

1555.

these circumstances, the conduct of such affairs as occurred of courfe, in governing fo many kingdoms, was a burden more than fufficient; but to push forward and complete the vast fchemes, which the ambition of his more active years had formed, or to keep in view and carry on the fame great fystem of policy, extending to every nation in Europe, and connected with the operations of every different court, were functions which fo far exceeded his ftrength, that they oppreffed and overwhelmed his mind. As he had been long accuftomed to view the bufiness of every department, whether civil, or military, or ecclefiaftical, with his own eyes, and to decide concerning it according to his own ideas, it gave him the utmost pain when he felt his infirmities increase fo fast upon him, that he was obliged to commit the conduct of all affairs to his ministers. He imputed every misfortune which befel him, and every miscarriage that happened, even when the former was unavoidable, and the latter accidental, to his inability to take the infpection of bufinefs himfelf. He complained of his hard fortune, in being opposed, in his declining years, to a rival, who was in the full vigour of life, and that while Henry could take and execute all his refolutions in perfon, he fhould now be reduced, both in council and in action, to rely on the abilities of other men. Having thus grown old before his time.

time, he wifely judged it more decent to conceal Book XI. his infirmities in fome folitude, than to expose them any longer to the publick eye; and prudently determined not to forfeit the fame, or lofe the acquifitions of his better years, by ftruggling, with a vain obftinacy, to retain the reins of government, when he was no longer able to hold them with steadiness, or to guide them with addrefs *.

* Dom Levesque, in his memoirs of Cardinal Granvel'e, gives a reason for the Emperor's relignation, which, as I recollect, is not mentioned by any other historian. He fays, that the Emperor having ceded the government of the kingdom of Naples and the dutchy of Milan to his fon, upon his marriage with the Queen of England; Philip, notwithstanding the advice and intreaties of his father, removed most of the ministers and officers whom he had employed in those countries; and appointed creatures of his own, to fill the places which they held. That he afpired openly, and with little delicacy, to obtain a fhare in the administration of affairs in the Low-Countries. That he endeavoured to thwart the Emperor's measures, and to limit his authority, behaving towards him fometimes with inattention, and fometimes with haughtinefs. That Charles finding that he must either yield to his fon, or openly contend with him, in order to avoid thefe, which were both difagreeable and mortifying to a father, he took the refolution of refigning his crowns, and of retiring from the world, vol. i. p. 24, &c. Dom Levefque derived his information concerning these curious facts, which he relates very briefly, from the original papers of cardinal Granvelle. But as that vast collection of papers, which has been preferved and arranged by M. L'Abbè Boizot of Befançon, though one of the most valuable historical monuments of the fixteenth

227 15550

Bur

BOOK XI. 1552.' in Circumftan- ni ces which had retarded Fr it.

But though Charles had revolved this fcheme in his mind for feveral years, and had communicated it to his fifters the dowager Queens of France and Hungary, who not only approved of his intention, but offered to accompany him to whatever place of retreat he fhould chufe; feveral things had hitherto prevented his carrying it into execution. He could not think of loading his fon with the government of fo many kingdoms, until he should attain such maturity of age, and of abilities, as would enable him to fustain that weighty burden. But as Philip. had now reached his twenty-eighth year, and had been early accustomed to business, for which he difcovered both inclination and capacity, it can hardly be imputed to the partiality of paternal affection, that his fcruples, with regard to this point, were entirely removed; and that he thought he might place him, without further hefitation or delay, on the throne which he wasabout to abandon. His mother's fituation had been another obstruction in his way. For although the had continued almost fifty years in confinement, and under the fame diforder of fixteenth century, and which cannot fail of throwing much light on the transactions of Charles V. is not published, I cannot determine what degree of credit should be given to this account of Charles's refignation. I have therefore taken no notice of it in relating this event.

mind

mind which concern for her hufband's death had brought upon her, yet the government of Spain was still vested in her jointly with the Emperor; her name was inferted together with his, in all the publick writs iffued in that kingdom; and fuch was the fond attachment of the Spaniards to her, that they would probably have fcrupled to recognife Philip as their fovereign, unlefs the had confented to affume him as her partner on the throne. Her utter incapacity for bufinefs rendered it impoffible to obtain her confent. But her death, which happened this year, removed this difficulty; and as Charles, upon that event, became fole Monarch of Spain, it left the fucceffion open to his fon. The war with France had likewife been a reafon for retaining the administration of affairs in his own hand, as he was extremely folicitous to have terminated it, that he might have given up his kingdoms to his fon at peace with all the world. But as Henry had discovered no disposition to close with any of his overtures, and had even rejected propofals of peace, which were equal and moderate, in a tone that feemed to indicate a fixed purpose of continuing hostilities, he faw that it was vain to wait longer in expectation of an event, which, however defirable, was altogether uncertain.

As

229

BOOK XI.

1555. The formalities with which he executed it.

BOOK XI. As this, then, appeared to be the proper juncture for executing the scheme which he had long meditated, Charles refolved to refign his kingdoms to his fon, with a folemnity fuitable to the importance of the transaction, and to perform this last act of fovereignty with fuch formal pomp, as might leave a lafting impression on the minds not only of his fubjects but of his fucceffor. With this view he called Philip out of England, where the peevifh temper of his Queen, which increased with her despair of having iffue, rendered him extremely unhappy; and the jealoufy of the English left him no hopes of obtaining the direction of their affairs. Having affembled the States of the Low-Countries at Bruffels, on the twenty-fifth of October, Charles feated himfelf, for the last time, in the chair of state, on one fide of which was placed his fon, and on the other his fifter the Queen of Hungary, regent of the Netherlands, with a fplendid retinue of the grandees of Spain and princes of the Empire standing behind him. The prefident of the council of Flanders, by his command, explained, in a few words, his intention in calling this extraordinary meeting of the States. He then read the instrument of refignation, by which Charles furrendered to his fon Philip all his territories, jurifdiction, and authority in the Low-Countries, abfolving his fubjects fubjects there from their oath of allegiance to BOOK XI. him, which he required them to transfer to Philip his lawful heir, and to ferve him with the fame loyalty and zeal which they had manifested, during fo long a courfe of years, in fupport of his government.

230

CHARLES then role from his feat, and leaning on the fhoulder of the Prince of Orange, because he was unable to stand without support, he addreffed himfelf to the audience, and from a paper which he held in his hand, in order to affift his memory, he recounted, with dignity, but without oftentation, all the great things which he had undertaken and performed fince the commencement of his administration. He observed, that from the seventeenth year of his age, he had dedicated all his thoughts and attention to publick objects, referving no portion of his time for the indulgence of his eafe, and very little for the enjoyment of private pleafure; that either in a pacifick or hoftile manner, he had visited Germany nine times, Spain fix times, France four times, Italy feven times, the Low Countries ten times, England twice, Africa as often, and had made eleven voyages by fea; that while his health permitted him to discharge his duty, and the vigour of his conftitution was equal, in any degree, to the arduous office of governing Q4

232

BOOK XI.

1555-

governing fuch extensive dominions, he had never shunned labour, nor repined under fatigue; that now when his health was broken, and his vigour exhausted by the rage of an incurable dittemper, his growing infirmities admonished him to retire, nor was he fo fond of reigning, as to retain the fceptre in an impotent hand, which was no longer able to protect his fubjects, or to render them happy; that inftead of a fovereign worn out with difeafes, and fcarcely half alive, he gave them one in the prime of life, accuftomed already to govern, and who added to the vigour of youth all the attention and fagacity of maturer years; that if, during the courfe of a long administration, he had committed any material error in government, or if, under the preffure of fo many and great affairs, and amidft the attention which he had been obliged to give to them, he had either neglected or injured any of his fubjects, he now implored their forgivenefs; that, for his part, he should ever retain a grateful fenfe of their fidelity and attachment, and would carry the remembrance of it along with him to the place of his retreat, as his fweetest confolation, as well as the best reward for all his fervices, and in his last prayers to Almighty God would pour forth his ardent, wilhes for their welfare.

THEN

THEN turning towards Philip, who fell on his BOOK XI. knees and kiffed his father's hand, " If, fays he, I had left you by my death this rich inheritance, to which I have made fuch large additions, fome regard would have been juftly due to my memory on that account; but now when I voluntarily refign to you what I might have ftill retained, I may well expect the warmeft expressions of thanks on your part. With thefe, however, I difpenfe, and fhall confider your concern for the welfare of your fubjects, and your love of them, as the beft and moft acceptable teftimony of your gratitude to me. It is in your power, by a wife and virtuous administration, to justify the extraordinary proof which I, this day, give of my paternal affection, and to demonstrate that you are worthy of the confidence which I repofe in you. Preferve an inviolable regard for religion; maintain the Catholick faith in its purity; let the laws of your country be facred in your eyes; encroach not on the rights and privileges of your people; and if the time shall ever come, when you shall wish to enjoy the tranquillity of private life, may you have a fon endowed with fuch qualities, that you can refign your sceptre to him, with as much fatisfaction as I give up mine to you."

233

234 Воок XI.

.1555.

As foon as Charles had finished this long addrefs to his subjects and to their new fovereign, he funk into the chair, exhausted and ready to faint with the fatigue of such an extraordinary effort. During his discourse, the whole audience melted into tears, some from admiration of his magnanimity, others softened by the expressions of tenderness towards his son, and of love to his people; and all were affected with the deepest forrow at losing a sovereign, who had diftinguished the Netherlands, his native country, with particular marks of his regard and attachment.

PHILIP then arole from his knees, and after returning thanks to his father, with a low and fubmiffive voice, for the royal gift which his unexampled bounty had beftowed upon him, he addreffed the affembly of the States, and regretting his inability to fpeak the Flemish language with fuch facility as to express what he felt on this interesting occasion, as well as what he owed to his good fubjects in the Netherlands, he begged that they would permit Granvelle bishop of Arras, to deliver what he had given him in charge to fpeak in his name. Granvelle, in a long difcourfe, expatiated on the zeal with which Philip was animated for the good of his fubjects, on his refolution to devote all his time and talents to the promoting of their their happiness, and on his intention to imitate Book XI. his father's example in diffinguishing the Netherlands with peculiar marks of his regard. Maës, a lawyer of great eloquence, replied, in name of the States, with large professions of their fidelity and affection to their new fovereign.

3

Then Mary, Queen dowager of Hungary, refigned the regency, with which fhe had been entrusted by her brother during the space of twenty-five years. Next day Philip, in prefence of the States, took the ufual oaths to maintain the rights and privileges of his fubjects; and all the members, in their own name. and in that of their conftituents, fwore allegiance to him<sup>t</sup>.

A FEW weeks thereafter, Charles, in an affembly no lefs fplendid, and with a ceremonial equally pompous, refigned to his fon the crowns of Spain, with all the territories depending on them, both in the old and in the new world. Of all thefe vaft poffeffions, he referved nothing for himfelf but an annual penfion of an hundred thousand crowns, to defray the charges of his family, and to afford him a fmall fum for acts of beneficence and charity".

<sup>t</sup> Godleveus Relatio Abdicationis Car. V. ap. Goldast. Polit. Imper. p. 377. Strada de Bello Belgico, lib. i. p. 5. " The Emperor's refignation is an event not only of fuch importance, but of fuch a nature, that the precife date of 1556.

January 6.

As

it,

235

As he had fixed on a place of retreat in Spain, hoping that the drynefs of the air and warmth of the climate in that country might mitigate the violence of his difeafe, which had been much increafed by the moifture of the air and the rigour of the winters in the Netherlands, he was extremely impatient to embark for that kingdom, and to difengage himfelf entirely it, one would expect, should have been ascertained by historians with the greatest accuracy. There is, however, an amazing and unaccountable diversity among them with regard to this point. All agree, that the deed by which Charles transferred to his fon his dominions in the Netherlands, bears date at Bruffels the 25th of October. Sandoval fixes on the 28th of October as the day on which the ceremony of refignation happened, and he was prefent at the transaction, vol. ii. p. 592. Godleveus, who published a treatife de Abdicatione Caroli V, fixes the publick ceremony, as well as the date of the inftrument of refignation, on the 25th. Pere Barre, I know not on what authority, fixes it on the 24th of November, Hilt. D'Alem. viii. 976. Herrera agrees with Godleveus in fentiment, tom. i. 155. as likewife does Pallavicini, whofe authority with refpect to dates, and every thing where a minute accuracy is requisite, is of great weight, Hill. lib. xvi. p. 168. Hiftorians differ no lefs with regard to the day on which Charles refigned the crown of Spain to his fon. According to M. de Thou, it was a month after his having refigned his dominions in the Netherlands, i. e. about the 25th of November, Thuan. lib. xvi. p. 571. According to Sandoval, it was on the 16th of January, 1556, Sand. ii. 603. Autonio de Vera agrees wich him, Epitome del Vida del Car. V. p. 110. According to Pallavicini, it was on the 17th, Pal.

235 Воок XI.

1556. Refolves to fix his refidence in Spain.

entirely from business, which he found to be impoffible while he remained in Bruffels. But his phyficians remonstrated fo ftrongly against his venturing to fea at that cold and boifterous feason of the year, that he confented, though therlands. with reluctance, to put off his voyage for fome months.

By yielding to their intreaties, he had the Promotes fatisfaction, before he left the Low-Countries, ciation for of taking a confiderable ftep towards a peace with France, which he ardently wifhed for, not only on his fon's account, but that he might Pal. lib. xvi. p. 168. and with him Herrera agrees, Vida del D. Felipe, tom. i. p. 233. But Ferreras fixes it on the first day of January, Hist. Gener. tom. ix. p. 371. M. de Beaucaine fuppofes the refignation of the crown of Spain to have been executed a few days after the refignation of the Netherlands, Com. de Reb. Gall. p. 879. It is remarkable, that in the treaty of truce at Vaucelles, though Charles had made over all his dominions to his fon fome weeks previous to the conclusion of it, all the flipulations are in the Emperor's name, and Philip is only defigned King of England and Naples. It is certain Philip was not proclaimed King of Castile, &c. at Valladolid fooner than the 24th of March, Sandov. ii. p. 606; and previous to that ceremony, he did not choofe, it would feem, to affume the title of King of any of his Spanish kingdoms, or to perform any act of royal jurisdiction. In a deed annexed to the treaty of truce, dated April 19, he affumes the title of King of Castile, &c. in the usual style of the Spanish monarchs in that age. Corps Dipl. tom. iv. Append. p. 85.

the negopeace.

237 BOOK XI

-----1556. Obliged to remain for fome time in the Ne-

Воок XI. 1556.

238

have the merit, when quitting the world, of reeftablishing that tranquillity in Europe, which he had banifhed out of it almost from the time that he affumed the administration of affairs. Previous to his refignation, commissioners had been appointed by him and by the French King, in order to treat of an exchange of prifoners. In their conferences at the abbey of Vaucelles, near Cambray, an expedient was accidentally propofed for terminating hostilities between the contending monarchs, by a long truce, during the fubfiftence of which, and without difcuffing their respective claims, each fhould retain what was in his poffession. Charles, fenfible how much his kingdoms were exhaufted by the expensive and almost continual wars in which his ambition had engaged him, and eager to gain for his fon a fhort interval of peace, that he might establish himfelf firmly on his throne, declared warmly for clofing with the overture, though manifeftly dishonourable as well as difadvantageous; and fuch was the respect due to his wisdom and experience, that Philip, notwithstanding his unwillingnefs to purchafe peace by fuch conceffions, did not prefume to urge his opinion in opposition to that of his father.

A truce concluded. HENRY could not have hefitated one moment about giving his confent to a truce on fuch conditons, conditions, as would leave him in quiet pof- BOOK XI. feffion of the greater part of the Duke of Savoy's dominions, together with the important conquests which he had made on the German frontier. But it was no eafy matter to reconcile fuch a ftep with the engagements which he had come under to the Pope, in his late treaty with him. The Constable Montmorency, however, reprefented in fuch a ftriking light, the imprudence of facrificing the true interests of his kingdom to thefe rafh obligations, and took fuch advantage of the absence of the Cardinal of Lorrain, who had feduced the King into his alliance with the Caraffas, that Henry, naturally fluctuating and unfteady, and apt to be influenced by the advice last given him, authorized his ambaffadors to fign a treaty of truce with the Emperor for five years, on the terms which 5th Feb. had been proposed. But that he might not feem to have altogether forgotten his ally the Pope, who he forefaw would be highly exafperated, he, in order to footh him, took care that he should be expressly included in the truce *.

THE Count of Lalain repaired to Blois, and Ratified by the Admiral Coligny to Bruffels, the former to harchs. be prefent when the King of France, and the latter

* Mem. de Ribier, ii. 626. Corps Diplom, tom. iv. App. 81.

239

BOCK XI. 1556. The Pope's afton fhment and distrefs.

240

latter when the Emperor and his fon, ratified the treaty and bound themfelves by oath to observe it y. When an account of the conferences at Vaucelles, and of the conditions of truce which had been proposed there, were first carried to Rome, it gave the Pope no manner of difquiet. He trufted fo much to the honour of the French monarch, that he would not allow himfelf to think that Henry could forget fo foon, or violate fo fhamefully, all the flipulations in his league with him. He had fuch an high opinion of the Emperor's wifdom, that he made no doubt of his refuling his confent to a truce on fuch unequal terms; and on both these accounts he confidently pronounced that this, like many preceding negociations, would terminate in nothing. But later and more certain intelligence foon convinced him that in political affairs no reafoning is more fallacious, than, because an event is improbable, to conclude that it will not happen. The fudden and unexpected conclusion of the truce filled Book XI. Paul with aftonishment and terror. The Cardinal of Lorrain durst not encounter that storm of indignation, to which he knew that he should be exposed from the haughty Pontiff, who had fo good reafon to be incenfed; but departing abruptly from Rome, he left to the Cardinal. Tournon the difficult tafk of attempting to footh Paul and his nephews. They were fully fenfible of the perilous fituation in which they now flood. By their engagements with France, which were no longer fecret, they had highly irritated Philip. They dreaded the violence of his implacable temper. The Duke of Alva, a minister fitted, as well by his abilities as by the feverity of his nature, for executing all Philip's rigorous fchemes, had advanced from Milan to Naples, and began to affemble troops on the frontiers of the Ecclefiastical State. While they, if deferted by France, must not only relinquish all the hopes of dominion and fovereignty to which their ambition aspired, but remain exposed to the refentment of the Spanish monarch, without one ally to protect them against an enemy with whom they were fo little able to contend.

<sup>7</sup> One of Admiral de Coligny's attendants, who wrote to the court of France an account of what happened while they refided at Bruffels, takes notice; as an inflance of Fhilip's impolitenefs, that he received the French ambeffador in an apartment hung with tapeftry, which reprefented the battle of Pavia, the manner in which Francis I. was taken prifoner, his voyage to Spain, with all the mortifying circomftances of his captivity and impriforment at Madrid. Mem. de Ribier, ii. 634.

UNDER these circumstances, Paul had recourse He attempte to the arts of negociation and intrigue, of which VOL. IV. R the to rekindle the war.

24E

Book XI. 1556.

242

the Papal court knows how well to avail itfelf in order to ward off any calamity threatened by an enemy superior in power. He affected to approve highly of the truce, as an happy expedient for putting a stop to the effusion of Chriftian blood. He expressed his warmest wifhes that it might prove the forerunner of a definitive peace. He exhorted the rival Princes to embrace this favourable opportunity of fetting on foot a negociation for that purpofe, and offered, as their common father, to be mediator Under this pretext, he apbetween them. pointed Cardinal Rebiba his nuncio to the court of Bruffels, and his nephew Cardinal Caraffa to that of Paris. The publick instructions given to both were the fame; that they should use their utmost endeavours to prevail with the two monarchs to accept of the Pope's mediation, that, by means of it, peace might be re-eftablished, and measures might be taken for affembling a general council. But under this fpecious appearance of zeal for attaining objects fo defirable in themfelves, and fo becoming his facred character to purfue, Paul concealed very different intentions. Caraffa, belides his publick instructions, received a private commission to folicit the French King to renounce the treaty of truce, and to renew his engagements with the Holy See, and he was empowered to spare neither neither entreaties, nor promises, nor bribes, in Book XI. order to gain that point. This, both the uncle and the nephew confidered as the real end of the embaffy; while the other ferved to amufe the vulgar, or to deceive the Emperor and his fon. The Cardinal, accordingly, fet out in- 11th May; ftantly for Paris, and travelled with the greateft expedition, while Rebiba was detained fome weeks at Rome; and when it became neceffary for him to begin his journey, he received fecret orders to protract it as much as poffible, that the iffue of Caraffa's negociation might be known before he should reach Bruffels, and according to that, proper directions might be given to him with regard to the tone which he should assume, in treating with the Emperor and his fon <sup>z</sup>.

CARAFFA made his entry into Paris with ex- His negocian traordinary pomp; and having prefented a confecrated fword to Henry, as the Protector, on whole aid the Pope relied in the prefent exigency, he befought him not to difregard the entreaties of a parent in diffress, but to employ that weapon which he gave him in his defence. This he reprefented not only as a duty of filial piety, but as an act of justice. As the Pope,

2 Pallav. lib. xiii, p. 169. Burnet Hift, of Reform. ii. App. 309.

R 2

from 243 1556.

tions for that pure pole,

244

Воок XI.

from confidence in the affiftance and fupport which his late treaty with France entitled him to expect, had taken fuch steps as had irritated the King of Spain, he conjured Henry not to fuffer Paul and his family to be crushed under the weight of that refentment which they had drawn on themfelves merely by their attachment to France. Together with this argument addreffed to his generofity, he employed 'another which he hoped would work on his ambition. He affirmed that now was the time, when, with the most certain prospect of fuccess, he might attack Philip's dominions in Italy; that the flower of the veteran Spanish bands had perished in the wars of Hungary, Germany, and the Low-Countrie's; that the Emperor had left his fon an exhausted treasury, and kingdoms drained of men; that he had no longer to contend with the abilities, the experience, and good fortune of Charles, but with a monarch fcarcely feated on his throne, unpractifed in command, odious to many of the Italian states, and dreaded by all. He promifed that the Pope, who had already levied foldiers, would bring a confiderable army into the field, which when joined by a sufficient number of French troops, might, by one brifk and fudden effort, drive the Spaniards out of Naples, and add to the crown of France a kingdom, the conqueft of which had been been the great object of all his predeceffors du- BOOK XI. ring half a century, and the chief motive of all their expeditions into Italy.

EVERY word Caraffa spoke made a deep im- Their efpreffion on Henry; confcious, on the one hand, July 31. that the Pope had just cause to reproach him with having violated the laws not only of generofity but of decency, when he renounced his league with him, and had agreed to the truce of Vaucelles; and eager, on the other hand, not only to diffinguish his reign by a conquest, which three former monarchs had attempted without fuccefs, but likewife to acquire an eftablifhment of fuch dignity and value for one of his fons. Reverence, however, for the oath, by which he had fo lately confirmed the truce of Vaucelles; the extreme old age of the Pope, whofe death might occasion an entire revolution in the political fystem of Italy; together with the representations of Montmorency, who repeated all the arguments he had used against the first league with Paul, and pointed out the great and immediate advantages which France derived from the truce; kept Henry for fome time in fuspence, and might poffibly have outweighed all Caraffa's arguments. But the Cardinal was not fuch a novice in the arts of intrigue and negociation, as not to have expedients R 2 245 1556.

BOOK XI. 1556.

246

pedients ready for removing or furmounting all these obstacles. To obviate the King's scruple with regard to his oath, he produced powers from the Pope to absolve him from the obligation of it. By way of security against any danger which he might apprehend from the Pope's death, he engaged that his uncle would make such a nomination of Cardinals, as should give Henry the absolute command of the next election, and enable him to place in the Papal chair a perfon entirely devoted to his interest.

In order to counterbalance the effect of the Conftable's opinion and influence, he employed not only the active talents of the Duke of Guife, and the eloquence of his brother the Cardinal of Lorrain, but the address of the Queen, aided by the more powerful arts of Diana of Poitiers, who, unfortunately for France, co-operated with Catharine in this point, though fhe took pleafure, on almost every other occasion, to thwart and mortify her. They, by their united folicitations, eafily fwayed the King, who leaned of his own accord to that fide towards which they wished him to incline. All Montmorency's prudent remonstrances were disregarded; the nuncio abfolved Henry from his oath; and he figned a new league with the Pope, which rekindled kindled the flames of war both in Italy and in the Low-Countries.

As foon as Paul was informed by his nephew that there was a fair prospect of his fucceeding in this negociation, he difpatched a meffenger after the nuncio Rebiba, with orders to return to Rome, without proceeding to Bruffels, As it was now no longer neceffary to preferve that tone of moderation, which fuited the character of a mediator, and which he had affected to affume, or to put any farther reftraint upon his refentment against Philip, he boldly. threw off the mask, and took such violent steps as rendered a rupture unavoidable. He feized and imprisoned the Spanish envoy at his court. He excommunicated the Colonnas; and having deprived Mark Antonio, the head of that family, of the dukedom of Paliano, he granted that dignity, together with the territory annexed to it, to his nephew the Count of Montorio. He ordered a legal information to be prefented in the confiftory of Cardinals against Philip, fetting forth that he, notwithstanding the fidelity and allegiance due by him to the Holy See, of which he held the crown of Naples, had not only afforded a retreat in his dominions to the Colonnas, whom the Pope had excommunicated and declared rebels, but had furnished them with arms, and was ready, in conjunction with R'4 them,

Воок XI. 1556.

247

July 31. The Pope's violent proceedings again& Philip.

Воок XI. 1556.

248

them, to invade the Ecclefiastical State in an hostile manner; that fuch conduct in a vassal was to be deemed treafon against his liege lord, the punishment of which was the forfeiture of his fief. Upon this the confiftorial advocate requested the Pope to take cognizance of the caufe, and to appoint a day for hearing of it, when he would make good every article of the charge, and expect from his justice that fentence which the heinoufness of Philip's crimes merited. Paul, whofe pride was highly flattered with the idea of trying and paffing judgment on fo great a King, affented to his requeft; and as if it had been no lefs eafy to execute than to pronounce fentence, declared that he would confult with the Cardinals concerning the formalities requifite in conducting the trial *.

Philip's fuperfitious fcruples.

July 27.

BUT while Paul allowed his pride and refentment to drive him on with fuch headlong impetuofity, Philip difcovered an amazing moderation on his part. He had been taught by the Spanish ecclesiafticks, who had the charge of his education, a profound veneration for the Holy See. This fentiment, which had been early infused, grew up with him as he advanced in years, and took full possession of his mind, which was naturally thoughtful, ferious, and prone to superstition. When he forefaw a rup-" Pallav. lib, xiii. 171.

ture,

ture with the Pope approaching, he had fuch violent fcruples with refpect to the lawfulnefs of taking arms against the Vicegerent of Christ, and the common father of all Christians, that he confulted fome Spanish divines upon that point. They, with the usual dexterity of cafuifts in accommodating their responses to the circumftances of those who apply to them for direction, affured him that, after employing prayers and remonstrances in order to bring the Pope to reafon, he had full right, both by the laws of nature and of Christianity, not only to defend himfelf when attacked, but to begin hoftilities, if that were judged the most proper expedient for preventing the effects of Paul's violence and injustice. Philip nevertheless continued to deliberate and delay, confidering it as a most cruel misfortune, that his administration should open with an attack on a perfon, whofe facred function and character he fo highly respected b.

AT last the Duke of Alva, who, in compliance with his master's scruples, had continued to negociate long after he fhould have begun to act, finding Paul inexorable, and that every overture of peace, and every appearance of hefitation on his part increased the Pontiff's natural arrogance, took the field and entered Sept. 5.

Ferrer. Hift. de Espagne, ix. 373. Herrera, i. 308.

The Duke of Alva . takes the field againft the Pope

249 BOOK XI. 1556.

the

250 Воок XI. 1556.

the ecclefiaftical territories. His army did not exceed twelve thousand men, but it was compofed of veteran foldiers, and commanded chiefly by those Roman barons, whom Paul's violence had driven into exile. The valour of the troops, together with the animofity of their leaders, who fought in their own quarrel, and to recover their own eftates, fupplied the want of numbers. As none of the French forces were yet arrived, Alva foon became mafter of the Campagna Romana; fome cities being furrendered through the cowardice of the garrifons, which confifted of raw foldiers, ill disciplined, and worfe commanded; the gates of others being opened by the inhabitants, who were eager to receive back their ancient mafters. Alva, that he might not be taxed with impiety in feizing the patrimony of the church, took poffession of the towns which capitulated, in the name of the college of cardinals, to which, or to the Pope that should be chosen to fucceed Paul, he declared that he would immediately reftore them.

A truce between the Pope and Philips THE rapid progress of the Spaniards, whose light troops made inroads to the gates of Rome, filled that city with confternation. Paul, though inflexible and undaunted himself, was obliged to give way fo far to the fears and folicitations of the Cardinals, as to fend deputies to Alva in order order to propose a ceffation of arms. The Pope BOOK XI. yielded the more readily, as he was fenfible of a double advantage which might be derived from obtaining that point. It would deliver the inhabitants of Rome from their present terror, and would afford time for the arrival of the fuccours which he expected from France. Nor was Alva unwilling to close with the overture, both as he knew how defirous his mafter was to terminate a war, which he had undertaken with reluctance, and as his army was fo much weakened by garrifoning the great number of towns which he had reduced, that it was hardly in a condition to keep the field without fresh recruits. A truce was accordingly concluded first for ten, and afterwards for forty Nov. 19. days, during which, various schemes of peace were proposed, and perpetual negociations were carried on, but with no fincerity on the part of the Pope. The return of his nephew the Cardinal to Rome, the receipt of a confiderable fum remitted by the King of France, the arrival of one body of French troops, together with the expectation of others which had begun their march, rendered him more arrogant than ever, and banished all thoughts from his mind, but those of war and revenge °.

e Pallav. lib. xiii. 177. Thuan. lib. xvii. 588. Mem. de Ribier, ii. 664.

1550.

251

THE

and the set of the set of the set of the W

ТНЕ

HISTORY

OF THE

Source in a string to the bigs

We are in binomia sit our

REIGN

OF THE COMPTEND

EMPEROR CHARLES V.

BOOK XII.

W HILE these operations or intrigues kept the Pope and Philip bufy and attentive, the Emperor difentangled himself finally from all the affairs of this world, and set out for the place of his retreat. He had hitherto retained the Imperial dignity, not from any unwillingness to relinquish it, for, after having refigned the real and extensive authority that he enjoyed in his hereditary dominions, to part with the limited and often ideal jurifdiction which belongs to an elective crown, was no great facrifice. His fole motive for delay was to gain a few

BOOKXII.

1556. Charles's new attempt to alter the fucceffion of the Empire.

1556.

Book XII. few months, for making one trial more, in order to accomplish his favourite scheme in behalf of his fon. At the very time Charles feemed to be most fensible of the vanity of worldly grandeur, and when he appeared to be quitting it not only with indifference, but with contempt, the vaft fchemes of ambition, which had fo long occupied and engroffed his mind, ftill kept poffeffion of it. He could not think of leaving his fon in a rank inferior to that which he himfelf had held among the Princes of Europe. As he had, fome years before, made a fruitless attempt to fecure the Imperial crown to Philip, that by uniting it to the kingdoms of Spain, and the dominions of the house of Burgundy, he might put it in his power to profecute, with a better prospect of fuccess, those great plans, which his own infirmities had obliged him to abandon, he was still unwilling to relinquish this flattering project as chimerical or unattainable.

Which proves unfuccefiful.

NOTWITHSTANDING the repulse which he had formerly met with from his brother Ferdinand, he renewed his folicitations with fresh importunity; and during the fummer, had tried every art, and employed every argument, which he thought could induce him to quit the Imperial throne to Philip, and to accept of the investiture of some province, either in Italy, or in in the Low Countries, as an equivalent *. But Book XII. Ferdinand, who was fo firm and inflexible with regard to this point, that he had paid no regard to the folicitations of the Emperor, even when they were enforced with all the weight of authority which accompanies fupreme power, received the overture, that now came from him in the fituation to which he had defcended, with greater indifference, and would hardly deign to liften to it. Charles, ashamed of his own credulity in having imagined that he might accomplish that now, which he had attempted formerly without fuccefs, defifted finally from his fcheme. He then refigned the government of the Empire, and having transferred all his claims of obedience and allegiance from the Germanick body, to his brother the King of the Romans, he executed a deed to that effect, with all the formalities requifite in fuch an important tranfaction. The inftrument of refignation he committed to William Prince of Orange, and empowered him to lay it before the college of electors b.

254

NOTHING now remained to detain Charles from that retreat for which he languished. The preparations for his voyage having been made for fome time, he fet out for Zuitburg in Ambassades des Noailles, tom. v. 356. . . Goldast, Constit. Imper. pars i. 576.

255 1556.

August 27:

Charles fets out for Spain.

Zealand,

BOOKXII.

1556.1

Zealand, where the fleet had orders to rendezvous. In his way thither he paffed through Ghent, and after ftopping there a few days, to indulge that tender and pleafant melancholy, which arifes in the mind of every man in the decline of life, on vifiting the place of his nativity, and viewing the fcenes and objects familiar to him in his early youth, he purfued his journey, accompanied by his fon Philip, his daughter the archdutchefs, his fifters the dowager Queens of France and Hungary, Maximilian his fon-inlaw, and a numerous retinue of the Flemish nobility. Before he went on board, he difmiffed them, with marks of his attention or regard, and taking leave of Philip with all the tendernefs of a father who embraced his fon for the last time, he set fail on the seventeenth of September under convoy of a large fleet of Spanish, Flemish, and English ships. He declined a preffing invitation, from the Queen of England, to land in some part of her dominions, in order to refresh himfelf, and that she might have the comfort of feeing him once more. It cannot furely, faid he, be agreeable to a Queen to receive a visit from a father-in-law, who is now nothing more than a private gentleman.

His arrival and reception there. His voyage was profperous, and he arrived at Laredo in Bifcay on the eleventh day after he left Zealand. As foon as he landed, landed; he fell proftrate on the ground; and confidering himfelf now as dead to the world, he kiffed the earth, and faid, " Naked came I out of my mother's womb, and naked I now return to thee, thou common mother of mankind." From Laredo he purfued his journey to Burgos, carried by his attendants fometimes in a chair, and fometimes in a horfe litter, fuffering exquisite pain at every step, and advancing with the greateft difficulty. Some of the Spanish nobility repaired to Burgos, in order to pay court to him, but they were fo few in number, and their attendance was fo negligent, that Charles observed it, and felt, for the first time, that he was no longer a Monarch. Accuftomed from his early youth to the dutiful and officious refpect with which those who posses fovereign power are attended, he had received it with the credulity common to Princes, and was weak enough to be mortified, when he now difcovered, that he had been indebted to his fortune, for much of that obfequious regard which he had fondly thought was paid to his perfonal qualities. But though he might have foon learned to forget the levity of his fubjects, or to have despifed their neglect, he was more deeply afflicted with his fon's ingratitude, who, forgetting already how much he owed to his father's bounty, obliged him to remain fome weeks at Burgos, before he paid

256

VOL. IV.

S

257 Воок XII. 1556.

Воок Х!І. 15;56.

258

paid him the first moiety of that fmall pension, which was all that he had referved of fo many kingdoms. As without this fum, Charles could not difinifs his domeflicks with fuch rewards as their fervices merited, or his generofity had deftined for them, he could not help expreffing both furprife and diffatisfaction . At last the money was paid, and Charles having difmiffed a great number of his domefticks, whofe attendance he thought would be fuperfluous or cumbersome in his retirement, he proceeded to Valladolid. There he took a last and tender leave of his two fifters, whom he would not permit to accompany him to his folitude, though they entreated it with tears, not only that they might have the confolation of contributing by their attendance and care to mitigate or to footh his fufferings, but that they might reap inftruction and benefit by joining with him in those pious exercifes, to which he had confecrated the remainder of his days.

The place of his retreat.

FROM Valladolid he continued his journey to Plazencia in Effremadura. He had paffed through this place a great many years before, and having been ftruck at that time with the delightful fituation of the monaftery of St. Juftus, belonging to the order of St. Jerome, not many · Strada de Bello Belg. lib. i. 9.

miles

miles diftant from the town, he had then ob- BOOK XII. ferved to some of his attendants, that this was a fpot to which Dioclefian might have retired with pleafure. The impression had remained fo strong on his mind, that he pitched upon it as the place of his retreat. It was feated in a vale of no great extent, watered by a fmall brook, and furrounded by rifing grounds, covered with lofty trees; from the nature of the foil, as well as the temperature of the climate, it was effeemed the most healthful and delicious fituation in Spain. Some months before his refignation he had fent an architect thither, to add a new apartment to the monastery, for his accommodation; but he gave ftrict orders that the ftile of the building should be such as fuited his present station, rather than his former dignity. It confifted only of fix rooms, four of them in the form of Friars cells, with naked walls; the other two, each twenty feet fquare, were hung with brown cloth, and furnished in the most fimple manner. They were all on a level with the ground; with a door on one fide into a garden, of which Charles himfelf had given the plan, and had filled it with various plants, which he intended to cultivate with his own hands. On the other fide they communicated with the chapel of the monaftery, in which he was to perform his devotions. Into this humble retreat, hardly fufficient for the comfortable accommodation of a private

S 2

259

1556:

Воок XII. 1557. February 24.

260

private gentleman, did Charles enter, with twelve domefticks only. He buried there, in folitude and filence, his grandeur, his ambition, together with all those vast projects, which, during half a century, had alarmed and agitated Europe, filling every kingdom in it, by turns, with the terror of his arms, and the dread of being fubjected to his power<sup>d</sup>.

Contraft between the behaviour of Charles and the Pope,

THE contrast between Charles's conduct and that of the Pope at this juncture, was fo obvious, that it ftruck even the most careless obfervers; nor was the comparison which they made much to Paul's advantage. The former, a conqueror, born to reign, long accuftomed to the fplendor which accompanies fupreme power, and to those busy and interesting scenes in which an active ambition had engaged him, quitted the world, at an early period of life, that he might close the evening of his days in tranquillity, and fecure fome interval for fober thought, and ferious recollection. The latter, a prieft, who had paffed the early part of his life in the fhade of the fchools, and in the fludy of the fpeculative fciences, who was feemingly fo detached from the world, that he had fhut himfelf up for many years in the folitude of a cloyfter, and who was not raifed to the papal throne until BOOK XII. he had reached the extremity of old age, difcovered at once all the impetuofity of youthful ambition, and engaged in vaft fchemes, in order to accomplifh which, he fcrupled not to fcatter the feeds of difcord, and to kindle the flames of war, in every corner of Europe. But Paul, regardless of the opinion or censures of mankind, held on his own courfe with his wonted arrogance and violence. Thefe, although they feemed already to have exceeded all bounds, rofe to still a greater height, upon the arrival of the duke of Guife in Italy.

<sup>a</sup> Sandov. ii. 607. & Zuniga, 100. Thuan. lib. xvii. 609.

THAT which the two Princes of Lorrain forefaw and defired, had happened. The duke of Guise was entrusted with the command of the army appointed to march to the Pope's affiftance. It confifted of twenty thousand men, of the best troops in the service of France. So high was the Duke's reputation, and fuch the general expectation of beholding fome extraordinary exertion of his courage and abilities in a war into which he had precipitated his country, chiefly with the defign of obtaining a field where he might difplay his own talents, that many of the French nobility, who had no command in the troopsemployed, accompanied him as volunteers. This army paffed the Alps in a rigorous feafon, and advanced towards Rome, without S 3 any

The duke of Guife leads the French army into Italy.

261

1557.

262

Воок XII. 1557. any opposition from the Spaniards, who, as they were not firong enough to act in different parts, had collected all their forces in one body on the frontiers of Naples, for the defence of that kingdom.

The Pope renews hofilities against Philip.

Feb. 12.

April 9.

EMBOLDENED by the approach of the French, the Pope let loofe all the fury of his refentment against Philip, which, notwithstanding the natural violence of his temper, prudential confiderations had hitherto obliged him to keep under some restraint. He named commissioners, whom he empowered to pass judgment in the fuit, which the confiftorial advocate had commenced against Philip, in order to prove that he had forfeited the crown of Naples, by taking arms against the Holy See, of which he was a vaffal. He recalled all the nuncios refident in the courts of Charles V. of Philip, or of any of their allies. This was levelled chiefly against Cardinal Pole, the papal legate in the court of England, whole great merit, in having contributed fo fuccefsfully to reconcile that kingdom to the church of Rome, together with the expectation of farther fervices he might perform, was not fufficient to fcreen him from the refentment which he had incurred by his zealous endeavours to re-establish peace between the house of Austria and France. He commanded an addition to be made to the anathemas mas annually denounced against the enemies of BOOK XII. the church on Maundy-Thursday, whereby he inflicted the censure of excommunication on the authors of the late invafion of the ecclefiaftical territories, whatever their rank or dignity might be; and, in confequence of this, the ufual prayers for the Emperor were omitted next day in the Pope's chapel ".

BUT while the Pope indulged himfelf in those His military wild and childish fallies of rage, either he neglected, or found that it exceeded his power, to take fuch meafures as would have rendered his resentment really formidable, and fatal to his enemies. For when the duke of Guife entered Rome, where he was received with a triumphal pomp, which would have been more fuitable if he had been returning from having terminated the war with glory, than when he was going to begin it with a doubtful chance of fuccefs, he found none of the preparations for war in fuch forwardness as Caraffa had promised, or he had expected. The papal troops were far inferior in number to the quota flipulated; no magazines fufficient for their fublistence were formed ; nor was money for paying them provided. The Venetians, agreeably to that cautious maxim which the misfortunes of their ftate had first led them to adopt,

e Pal. lib. xiii. 180. Mem. de Ribier, ii. 678.

S 4

preparations inadequate.

263

1557.

264

Воок XII. 1557. adopt, and which was now become a fundamental principle in their policy, declared their refolution to preferve an exact neutrality, without taking any part in the quarrels of Princes, fo far fuperior to themfelves in power. The other Italian ftates were either openly united in league with Philip, or fecretly wifhed fuccefs to his arms againft a Pontiff, whofe inconfiderate ambition had rendered Italy once more the feat of war.

Duke of Guife's operations.

April 13.

THE duke of Guise perceived that the whole weight of the war would devolve on him; and became fenfible, though too late, how imprudent it is to rely, in the execution of great enterprizes, on the aid of feeble allies. Pushed on, however, by the Pope's impatience for action, as well as by his own defire of performing fomething of what he had fo confidently undertaken, he marched towards Naples, and began his operations. But the fuccefs of thefe fell far short of his former reputation, of what the world expected, and of what he himfelf had promifed. He opened the campaign with the fiege of Civitella, a town of fome importance on the Neapolitan frontier. But the obstinacy with which the Spanish governor defended it, baffled all the impetuous efforts of the French valour, and obliged Guife, after a fiege of three weeks, to retire from the town with difgrace. He endeavoured deavoured to wipe off that ftain, by advancing BOOK XII. boldly towards the duke of Alva's camp, and offering him battle. But that prudent commander, fenfible of all the advantages of ftanding on the defensive before an invading enemy, declined an engagement, and kept within his intrenchments; and adhering to his plan with the fteadiness of a Castilian, eluded, with great addrefs, all Guife's stratagems to draw him into action f. By this time fickness began to waste the French army; violent diffensions had arisen between Guife and the commander of the Pope's forces; the Spaniards renewed their incursions into the ecclesiaftical state; the Pope, when he found, instead of the conquests and triumphs which he had fondly expected, that he could not fecure his own territories from depredation, murmured, complained, and began to talk of peace. The duke of Guife, mortified to the laft degree with having acted fuch an inglorious part, not only folicited his court either to reinforce his army, or to recal him, but urged Paul to fulfil his engagements; and called on Cardinal Caraffa, fometimes with reproaches, fometimes with threats, to make good those magnificent promifes, from a rash confidence in which he had advifed his mafter to renounce the truce of Vaucelles, and to join in league with the Pope 5.

f Herrera vida de Felipe, 181. s Thuan. lib. xxviii. 614. Palav. lib. xiii. 181. Burn. ii. app. 317.

1557.

265

BUT

BOOK XI. 1 57. Hoftiluies in the Low-Countries.

BUT while the French affairs in Italy were in this wretched fituation, an unexpected event happened in the Low Countries, which called the duke of Guife from a station wherein he could acquire no honour, to the most dignified and important charge which could be committed to a subject. As soon as the French had difcovered their purpole of violating the truce of Vaucelles, not only by fending an army into Italy, but by attempting to furprise fome of the frontier towns in Flanders, Philip, though willing to have avoided a rupture, determined to profecute the war with fuch fpirit, as fhould make his enemies fenfible, that his father had not erred, when he judged him to be fo capable of government, that he had given up the reins into his hands. As he knew that Henry had been at great expence in fitting out the army under the duke of Guife, and that his treafury was hardly able to answer the exorbitant and endlefs demands of a diftant war, he forefaw that all his operations in the Low-Countries muft, of confequence, prove feeble, and be confidered only as fecondary to those in Italy. For that reason, he prudently resolved to make his principal effort in that place where he expected the French to be weakeft, and to bend his chiefforce against that quarter where they would feel a blow most fensibly. With this view, he affembled bled in the Low-Countries an army of about BOOK XII. fifty-thousand men, the Flemings ferving him on this occafion with that active zeal, which fubjects are wont to exert in obeying the commands of a new fovereign. But Philip, cautious and provident, even at this early period of life, did not reft all his hopes of fuccess on that formidable force alone.

266

He had been labouring for fome time to engage the English to espouse his quarrel; and though it was manifeftly the intereft of that kingdom to maintain a strict neutrality, and the people themfelves were fenfible of the advantages which they derived from it; though he knew how odious his name was to the Englifh, and how averfe they would be to co-operate with him in any measure, he nevertheless did not defpair of accomplishing his point. He relied on the affection wherewith the Queen doated on him, which was fo violent, that even his coldness and neglect had not extinguished it; he knew her implicit reverence for his opinion, and her fond defire of gratifying him in every particular. That he might work on these with greater facility, and more certain fuccefs, he fet out for England. The Queen who, during her hufband's absence, had languished in perpetual dejection, refumed fresh spirits on his Philip endeavours to engage Eng-land in the war.

267 1557.

Воок XII. 1557.

2.68

his arrival; and without paying the least attention either to the interest or to the inclinations of her people, entered warmly into all his fchemes. In vain did her privy-council remonftrate against the imprudence as well as danger of involving the nation in an unneceffary war; in vain did they put her in mind of the folemn treaties of peace fublifting between England and France, which the conduct of that nation had afforded her no pretext to violate. Mary, foothed by Philip's careffes, or intimidated by the threats which his afcendant over her emboldened him at fome times to throw out, was deaf to every thing that could be urged in oppolition to his fentiments, and infifted with the greatest vehemence on an immediate declaration of war against France. The council, though all Philip's addrefs and Mary's authority were employed to gain or overawe them, after ftruggling long, yielded at laft, not from conviction, but merely from deference to the will of their fovereign. War was declared against France, the only one perhaps against that kingdom into which the English ever entered with reluctance. As Mary knew the averfion of the nation to this measure, she durst not call a parliament in order to raife money for carrying on the war. She fupplied this want, however, by a ftrain of prerogative; and levied large fums on her her fubjects by her own authority. This enabled Book XII. her to affemble a fufficient body of troops, and to fend eight thousand men under the conduct of the earl of Pembroke to join Philip's army b.

[ June 20.

PHILIP, who was not ambitious of military Operations glory, gave the command of his army to Emanuel Philibert, duke of Savoy, and fixed his own refidence at Cambray, that he might be at hand to receive the earlieft intelligence of his motions, and to aid him with his counfels. The duke opened the campaign with a mafterly ftroke of address, which justified Philip's choice, and discovered fuch a superiority of genius over the French generals, as almost enfured fuccefs in his fubfequent operations. He appointed the general rendezvous of his troops at a place confiderably diftant from the country which he deftined to be the fcene of action; and having kept the enemy in fuspence for a good time with regard to his intentions, he at last deceived them fo effectually by the variety of his marches and counter-marches, as led them to conclude that he meant to bend all his force against the province of Champagne, and would attempt to penetrate into the kingdom on that fide. In confequence of this opinion, they drew all their ftrength towards that quarter, and reinforcing h Carte, iii. 337.

1557.

269

of Philip's army in the Low-Countries.

Book XII. the garrifons there, left the towns on other parts of the frontier defitute of troops fufficient to defend them.

Invefis St. Quintin.

EMANUEL, as foon as he perceived that this feint had its full effect, turned fuddenly to the right, advanced by rapid marches into Picardy, and fending his cavalry, in which he was extremely ftrong, before him, invefted St. Quintin. This was a town deemed in that age of confiderable strength, and of great importance, as there were few fortified cities between it and Paris. The fortifications, however, had been much neglected; the garrifon, weakened by draughts fent towards Champagne, did not amount to a fifth part of the number requilite for its defence; and the governor, though a brave officer, was neither of rank, nor authority, equal to the command in a place of fo much confequence, befieged by fuch a formidable army. A few days must have put the Duke of Savoy in poffeffion of the town, if the admiral de Coligny, who thought it concerned his honour to attempt faving a place of fuch importance to his country, and which lay within his jurifdiction as governor of Picardy, had not taken the gallant refolution of throwing himfelf into it, with fuch a body of men as he could collect of a fudden. This refolution he executed 2 cuted with great intrepidity, and, if the nature of the enterprize be confidered, with no contemptible fuccess; for though one half of his fmall body of troops was cut off, he, with the other, broke through the enemy, and entered the town. The unexpected arrival of an officer of fuch high rank and reputation, and who had exposed himself to such danger in order to join them, infpired the defponding garrifon with courage. Every thing that the admiral's great skill and experience in the art of war could fuggeft, for annoying the enemy, or defending the town, was attempted; and the citizens as well as the garrifon, feconding his zeal with equal ardour, feemed to be determined that they would hold out to the last, and facrifice themselves in order to fave their country i.

270

THE Duke of Savoy, whom the English, The French under the Earl of Pembroke, joined about this time, pushed on the fiege with the greatest vigour. An army fo numerous, and fo well fupplied with every thing requifite, carried on its approaches with great advantage against a garrifon which was ftill fo feeble that it durft feldom venture to difturb or retard the enemy's operations by fallies. The admiral, fenfible of the approaching danger, and unable to avert it, i Thuan. lib. xix. 647.

acquainted

endeavour to relieve the town,

BOOK XII. 1557.

271

272

BOOK XII.

1557.

acquainted his uncle the conftable Montmorency, who had the command of the French army, with his fituation, and pointed out to him a method by which he might throw relief into the town. The conftable, folicitous to fave a town, the lofs of which would open a paffage for the enemy into the heart of France; and eager to extricate his nephew out of that perilous fituation, in which zeal for the publick had engaged him; refolved, though aware of the danger, to attempt what he defired. With this view, he marched from La Fere towards St. Quintin at the head of his army, which was not by one half fo numerous as that of the enemy, and having given the command of a body of chosen men to Coligny's brother Dandelot, who was colonel general of the French infantry, he ordered him to force his way into the town by that avenue which the admiral had represented as most practicable, while he himfelf with the main army would give the alarm to the enemy's camp on the opposite fide, and endeavour to draw all their attention towards that quarter. Dandelot executed his orders with August 10. greater intrepidity than conduct. His foldiers rushed on with fuch headlong impetuolity, that though it broke the first body of the enemy which flood in their way, it threw themfelves into the utmost confusion; and being attacked by fresh troops which closed in upon them on every fide, the greater part of them were cut in pieces, Dandelot, with about five hundred of the most adventrous, and most fortunate, making good his entrance into the town.

by

MEANWHILE the Conftable, in executing his The battle part of the plan, advanced fo near the camp of tin. the befiegers, as rendered it impossible to retreat with fafety in the face of an enemy fo much fuperior in number. The Duke of Savoy inftantly perceived Montmorency's error, and prepared, with the prefence of mind and abilities of a great general, to avail himfelf of it. He drew up his army in order of battle, with the greatest expedition, and watching the moment when the French began to file off towards La Fere, he detached all his cavalry, under the command of the count of Egmont, to fall on their rear, while he himfelf, at the head of his infantry, advanced to support him. The French retired at first in perfect order, and with a good countenance; but when they faw Egmont draw near with his formidable body of cavalry, the flock of which they were confcious that they could not withftand, the profpect of imminent danger added to diftruft of their general, whofe imprudence every foldier now perceived, ftruck them with general confternation. They began VOL. IV. infenfibly T

273 EOOK XII. 1557.

of St. Quin-

Воок XII 1557.

274

Total de_ feat of the French.

infenfibly to quicken their pace, and those in the rear preffed fo violently on fuch as were before them, that in a fhort time their march refembled a flight rather than a retreat. Egmont, observing their confusion, charged them with the greatest fury, and in a moment all their men at arms, the pride and ftrength of the French troops in that age, gave way and fled with precipitation. The infantry, however, whom the Constable, by his prefence and authority, kept to their colours, ftill continued their retreat in good order, until the enemy brought fome pieces of cannon to bear upon their center, which threw them into fuch confusion, that the cavalry, renewing their attack, broke in, and the rout became univerfal. About four thoufand of the French fell in the field, and among these the Duke of Anguyen, a Prince of the blood, together with fix hundred gentlemen. The Conttable, as toon as he perceived the fortune of the day to be irretrievable, rushed into the thickeft of the enemy, with a refolution not to furvive the calamity, which his ill conduct had brought upon his country; but having received a dangerous wound, and being wafted with the lofs of blood, he was furrounded by fome Flemish officers, to whom he was known, who protected him from the violence of the foldiers, and obliged him to furrender. Befides the the Constable, the Dukes of Montpensier and BOOK XII. Longueville, the Marechal St. Andrè, many officers of diffinction, three hundred gentlemen, and near four thousand private foldiers were taken prifoners. All the colours belonging to the infantry, all the ammunition, and all the cannon, two pieces excepted, fell into the enemy's hands. The victorious army did not lofe above fourfcore menk.

THIS battle, no lefs fatal to France than the ancient victories of Crecy and Agincourt, gained by the English on the same frontier, bore a near refemblance to those difastrous events, in the fuddenness of the rout; in the rashness of the commander in chief; in the number of perfons of note flain or taken; and in the fmall loss fustained by the enemy. It filled Francé with equal confternation. Many inhabitants of Paris, with the fame precipitancy and trepidation as if the enemy had been already at their gates, quitted the city, and retired into the interior provinces. The King, by his prefence and exhortations, endeavoured to confole and to animate fuch as remained, and applying himfelf with the greatest diligence to repair the ruinous fortifications of the city, prepared to k Thuan, 650. Hæræi Annal, Brabant. ii. 692. Herrera, 291.

1557.

275

The first effects of it.

defend

276 BOOKXII. J557.

defend it against the attack which he instantly expected. But happily for France, Philip's caution, together with the intrepid firmness of the Admiral de Coligny, not only faved the capital from the danger to which it was exposed, but gained the nation a short interval, during which the people recovered from the terror and dejection occasioned by a blow no less fevere than unexpected, and Henry had leifure to take measures for the publick fecurity with the spirit which became the fovereign of a powerful and martial people.

Philip repairs to his army, PHILIP, immediately after the battle, vifited the camp at St. Quintin, where he was received with all the exultation of military triumph; and fuch were his transports of joy, on account of an event which threw fo much luftre on the beginning of his reign, that they fostened his fevere and haughty temper, into an unufual flow of courtefy. When the Duke of Savoy approached, and was kneeling to kifs his hands, he caught him in his arms, and embracing him with warmth, "It becomes me, fays he, rather to kifs your hands, which have gained me fuch a glorious and almost bloodlefs victory."

His deliberations concerning the profecution of the war. As foon as the rejoicings and congratulations on Philip's arrival were over, a council of war 5 was was held, in order to determine how they might improve their victory to the best advantage. The Duke of Savoy, feconded by feveral of the ableft officers formed under Charles V, infifted that they should immediately relinquish the fiege of St. Quintin, the reduction of which was now an object below their attention, and advance directly towards Paris; that as there were neither troops to oppole, nor any town of ftrength to retard their march, they might reach that capital while under the full impression of the aftonishment and terror occasioned by the rout of the army, and take poffeffion of it without refistance. But Philip, less adventrous or more prudent than his generals, preferred a moderate but certain advantage, to an enterprize of greater splendour, but of more doubtful fuccefs. He represented to the council the infinite refources of a kingdom fo powerful as France; the great number as well as martial fpirit of its nobles; their attachment to their fovereign; the vaft advantages with which they could carry on war in their own territories; and the unavoidable destruction, which must be the confequence of their penetrating too rashly into the enemy's country, before they had fecured fuch a communication with their own, as might render a retreat fafe, if upon any difastrous event that measure should become necessary. On all thefe T 3

277 Воок XII.

BOOKXII. 1557.

278

thefe accounts, he advifed the continuance of the fiege, and his generals acquiefced the more readily in his opinion, as they made no doubt of being mafters of the town in a few days, a lofs of time of fo little confequence in the execution of their plan, that they might eafily repair it by their fubfequent activity<sup>1</sup>.

St. Quintin defended by Admiral Coligny,

THE weakness of the fortifications, and the fmall number of the garrifon, which could no longer hope either for reinforcement, or relief, feemed to authorize this calculation of Philip's generals. But, in making it, they did not attend sufficiently to the character of Admiral de Coligny, who commanded in the town. A courage undifmayed and undifconcerted amidit the greatest dangers, an invention fruitful in refources, a genius which roufed and feemed to acquire new force upon every difaster, a talent of governing the minds of men, together with a capacity of maintaining his afcendant over them even under circumftances the most adverfe and diftrefsful, were qualities which Coligny poffefied in a degree fuperior to any general of that age. These qualities were peculiarly adapted to the flation in which he was now placed; and as he knew the infinite importance to his country of every hour which he could gain at this juncture, he exerted himfelf to the utmost in contriving how to protract the fiege, and to detain the enemy from attempting any enterprize more dangerous to France. Such were the perfeverance and skill with which he conducted the defence, and fuch the fortitude as well as patience with which he animated the garrifon, that though the Spaniards, the Flemings, and the English, carried on the attack with all the ardour which national emulation inspires, he held out the town seventeen days. He was taken prisoner, at last, on the breach, overpowered by the fuperior number of the enemy.

<sup>1</sup>Belcar. Commentar, de Reb. Gallic. 901.

portance

HENRY availed himfelf, with the utmoft acti- Henry's vity, of the interval which the Admiral's welltimed obstinacy had afforded him. He appointed officers to collect the scattered remains of the Constable's army; he isfued orders for levy. ing foldiers in every part of the kingdom; he commanded the ban and arriere ban of the frontier provinces inftantly to take the field, and to join the Duke of Nevers at Laon in Picardy; he recalled the greater part of the veteran troops which ferved under the Marechal Briffac in Piedmont: he fent courier after courier to the Duke of Guife, requiring him, together  $T_4$ which is taken by affault.

279 EOOKXII. 1557.

August 27.

measures tor the defence of his kingdom.

Боок XI'.

280

gether with all his army, to return inftantly for the defence of their country; he difpatched one envoy to the Grand Signior, to folicit the affiftance of his fleet, and the loan of a fum of money; he fent another into Scotland, to incite the Scots to invade the north of England, that, by drawing Mary's attention to that quarter, he might prevent her from reinforcing her troops which ferved under Philip. These efforts of the King were warmly feconded by the zeal of his subjects. The city of Paris granted him a free gift of three hundred thousand livres. The other great towns imitated the liberality of the capital, and contributed in proportion. Several noblemen of diffinction engaged, at their own expence, to garrifon and defend the towns which lay most exposed to the enemy. Nor was the general concern for the publick confined to communities alone, or to those in the higher sphere of life, but diffusing itself among perfons of every rank, each individual feemed disposed to act with as much vigour as if the honour of the King, and the fafety of the ftate, had depended folely on his perfonal efforts ".

The victory of St. Quintin productive of few beneficial confequences. PHILIP, who was no ftranger either to the prudent measures taken by the French monarch for the fecurity of his dominions, or to the spirit m Mem. de Ribier, ii. 701. 703.

with with which his subjects prepared to defend them- BOOKXII. felves, perceived, when it was too late, that he had loft an opportunity which could never be recalled, and that it was now vain to think of penetrating into the heart of France. He abandoned, therefore, without much reluctance, a fcheme which was too bold and hazardous to be perfectly agreeable to his cautious temper; and employed his army, during the remainder of the campaign, in the fieges of Ham and Catelet. Of these, he soon became master; and the reduction of two fuch petty towns, together with the acquisition of St. Quintin, were all the advantages which he derived from one of the most decifive victories gained in that century. Philip himfelf, however, continued in high exultation on account of his fuccefs; and as all his paffions were tinged with fuperstition, he, in memory of the battle of St. Quintin, which had been fought on the day confecrated to St. Laurence, vowed to build a church, a monastery, and a palace, facred to that faint and martyr. Before the expiration of the year, he laid the foundation of an edifice, in which all these were united, at the Escurial in the neighbourhood of Madrid; and the fame principle, which dictated the vow, directed the building. For the plan of the work was fo formed as to refemble a gridiron, which, according 281 1557.

Воок XII. 1557•

282

ing to the legendary tale, had been the inftrument of St. Laurence's martyrdom. Notwithftanding the vaft and expensive fchemes, in which his reftlefs ambition involved him, Philip continued the building with fuch perfeverance for twenty-two years, and referved fuch vaft fums for this monument of his devotion and vanity, that the monarchs of Spain are indebted to him for a royal refidence, which, though not the moft elegant, is certainly the moft fumptuous and magnificent of any in Europe<sup>n</sup>.

The French army recalled out of Italy.

THE first account of that fatal blow which the French had received at St. Quintin was carried to Rome by the courier, whom Henry had fent to recall the Duke of Guife. As Paul, even with the affiftance of his French auxiliaries, had hardly been able to check the progrefs of the Spanish arms, he forefaw that, as foon as he was deprived of their protection, his territories must be over-run in a moment. He remonstrated therefore with the greatest violence against the departure of the French army, reproaching the Duke of Guile for his ill-conduct, which had brought him into fuch an unhappy fituation; and complaining of the King for deferting him fo ungeneroufly under fuch circumftances. Guise's orders, however, were peremptory,

* Colmenar Annales d' Espagne, 10m. ii. p. 136.

peremptory. Paul, inflexible as he was, found BOOKXII. it neceffary to accommodate his conduct to the exigency of his affairs, and to employ the mediation of the Venetians, and of Cofmo di Medici, in order to obtain peace. Philip, who had been forced unwillingly to a rupture with the Pope, and who, even while fuccefs crowned his arms, doubted fo much the justice of his own caufe, that he had made frequent overtures of pacification, liftened eagerly to the first propofals of this nature from Paul, and discovered fuch moderation in his demands, as could hardly have been expected from a Prince elated with victory.

THE Duke of Alva on the part of Philip, and the Cardinal Caraffa in the name of his uncle, met at Cavi, and both being equally disposed to peace, they, after a short conference, terminated the war by a treaty, on the following terms: That Paul should renounce his league with France, and maintain for the future fuch a neutrality as became the common father of Chriftendom; That Philip should instantly reftore all the towns of the ecclefiaftical territory of which he had taken poffession; That the claims of the Caraffas to the dutchy of Paliano, and other demefnes of the Colonnas, should be referred to the decision of the republic of Venice: 7

1557.

283

A treaty of peace between the Pope and Philip.

284

Воок XII. 1557.

Venice; That the Duke of Alva should repair in perfon to Rome, and after asking pardon of Paul in his own name, and in that of his mafter, for having invaded the patrimony of the church, should receive the Pope's abfolution from that crime. Thus Paul, through Philip's fcrupulous timidity, finished an unprofperous war without any detriment to the Papal See. The conqueror appeared humble, and acknowledged his error; while he who had been vanquished retained his usual haughtiness, and was treated with every mark of fuperiority °. The Duke of Alva, in terms of the treaty, repaired to Rome, and, in the pofture of a fupplicant, kiffed the feet, and implored the forgivenefs of that very perfon, whom his arms had reduced to the laft extremity. Such was the superstitious veneration of the Spaniards for the papal character, that Alva, though perhaps the proudeft man of the age, and accuftomed from his infancy to a familiar intercourfe with Princes, acknowledged that when he approached the Pope, he was fo much overawed, that his voice failed, and his prefence of mind forfook him P.

• Pallav. lib. xiii. 183. F. Paul, 380. Herrera, vol. i. 310. P Pallav. lib. xiii. 185. Summonte Istoria di Napoli, iv. 286.

But though this war, which at its com- BOOKXII. mencement threatened mighty revolutions, was brought to an end without occasioning any alteration in those States, which were its immediate object, it produced effects of confiderable Farnele. confequence in other parts of Italy. As Philip was extremely folicitous to terminate his quarrel with Paul as fpeedily as poffible, he was willing to make any facrifice in order to gain those Princes, who, by joining their troops to the Papal and French army, might have prolonged the war. With this view, he entered into a negociation with Octavio Farnele, Duke of Parma, and, in order to feduce him from his alliance with France, he reftored to him the city of Placentia with the territory depending on it, which Charles V. had feized in the year one thousand five hundred and forty-feven, had kept from that time in his poffeffion, and had transmitted, together with his other dominions, to Philip.

THIS step made fuch a discovery of Philip's character and views to Cosmo di Medici, the most fagacious as well as provident of all the ing Siena. Italian Princes, that he conceived hopes of accomplishing his favourite fcheme of adding Siena and its territories to his dominions in Tufcany. As his fuccefs in this attempt depended Cofmo di Medici's meafures for obtain-

285

1557. Philip reftores Placentia to Octavio

1557.

286

BoosXil. pended entirely on the delicacy of address with which it should be conducted, he employed all the refinements of policy in the negociation which he fet on foot for this purpofe. He began with foliciting Philip, whole treafury he knew to be entirely drained by the expence of the war, to repay the great fums which he had advanced to the Emperor during the fiege of Siena. When Philip endeavoured to elude a demand which Cofmo was unable to fatisfy, he affected to be extremely disquieted, and making no fecret of his difgust, instructed his ambassador at Rome to open a negociation with the Pope, which feemed to be the effect of it. The ambaffador executed his commission with fuch dexterity, that Paul, imagining Cofmo to be entirely alienated from the Spanish interest, proposed to him an alliance with France, which should be cemented by the marriage of his eldeft fon to one of Henry's daughters. Cofmo received the overture with such apparent fatisfaction, and with fo many professions of gratitude for the high honour of which he had the prospect, that not only the Pope's minifters, but the French envoy at Rome, talked confidently, and with little referve, of the accession of that important ally, as a matter certain and decided. The account of this was quickly carried to Philip; and Cofmo, who forefaw how much it would alarm him, had dispatched his nephew Ludovico de Toledo into the Netherlands, that he might be at hand to obferve and take advantage of his confternation, before the first impression which it made fhould in any degree abate. Colino was extremely fortunate in the choice of the inftrument whom he employed. Toledo waited, with patience, until he difcovered with certainty, that Philip had received fuch intelligence of his uncle's negociations at Rome, as must have filled his fuspicious mind with fear and jealoufy; and then craving an audience, he required payment of the money which had been borrowed by the Emperor, in the most earnest and peremptory terms. In urging that point, he artfully threw out feveral dark hints and ambiguous declarations, concerning the extremities to which Cofmo might be driven by a refusal of this just demand, as well as by other grievances of which he had good reafon to complain.

de

PHILIP, aftonished at an address in fuch a Their fucftrain, from a Prince fo far his inferior as the Duke of Tuscany, and comparing what he now heard, with the information which he had received from Italy, immediately concluded that Cofmo had ventured to affume this hold and unufual tone on the prospect of his union with France. In order to prevent the Pope and . Henry from acquiring an ally, who by his abilities

287 BOOKXII. 1557-

cels.

288

Всок XII. 1557. abilities as well as the fituation of his dominions. would have added both reputation and ftrength to their confederacy, he offered to grant Cofmo the investiture of Siena, if he would confent to accept of it as an equivalent for the fums due to him, and engage to furnish a body of troops towards the defence of Philip's territories in Italy, against any power who should attack them. As foon as Cofmo had brought Philip to make this conceffion, which was the object of all his artifices and intrigues, he did not protract the negociation by any unneceffary delay, or any excess of refinement, but closed eagerly with the propofal, and Philip, in fpite of the remonftrances of his ableft counfellors, figned a treaty with him to that effect 9.

As no Prince was ever more tenacious of his rights than Philip, or lefs willing to relinquifh any territory which he poffeffed, by what tenure foever he held it, thefe unufual conceffions to the Dukes of Parma and Tufcany, by which he wantonly gave up countries, in acquiring or defending which, his father had employed many years, and wafted much blood and treafure, cannot be accounted for from any motive, but his fuperfitious defire of extricating himfelf out of the war which he had been forced to wage against the Pope. By these treaties, however, the balance of power among the Italian States was poized with greater equality, and rendered lefs variable than it had been fince it received the first violent shock from the invasion of Charles VIII. of France. From this period Italy ceafed to be the great theatre, on which the monarchs of Spain, France, and Germany, contended for power or for fame. Their diffentions and hoftilities, though as frequent and violent as ever. being excited by new objects, ftained other regions of Europe with blood, and rendered them miferable in their turn, by the devastations of war.

9 Thuan. lib. xviii. 624. Herrera, i. 263. 275. Pallav. lib. xiii. 180.

THE Duke of Guile left Rome on the fame Sept. 29. day that his adverfary the Duke of Alva made of Guife's his humiliating fubmiffion to the Pope. He was received in France as the guardian angel of the kingdom. His late ill fuccefs in Italy feemed to be forgotten, while his former fervices, particularly his defence of Metz, were recounted with exaggerated praife; and he was welcomed in every city through which he paffed, as the reftorer of publick fecurity, who, after having fet bounds by his conduct and valour to the victorious arms of Charles V. returned now, at the call of his country, to check the VOL. IV. formidable TT formidable progress of Philip's power. The reception which he met with from Henry was no less cordial and honourable. New titles were invented, and new dignities created, in order to diftinguish him. He was appointed lieutenantgeneral in chief both within and without the kingdom, with a jurifdiction almost unlimited, and hardly inferior to that which was poffeffed by the King himfelf. Thus, through the fingular felicity which attended the Princes of Lorrain, the miscarriage of their own schemes contributed to aggrandize them. The calamities of his country, and the ill-conduct of his rival the Conftable, exalted the Duke of Guife to a height of dignity and power, which he could not have expected to attain by the most fortunate and most complete success of his own ambitious projects.

289 BOOKXII. 1557.

The Duke reception in France.

290 BOOKXII. 1557.

Takes the command of the army. THE Duke of Guife, eager to perform fomething fuitable to the high expectations of his countrymen, and that he might juftify the extraordinary confidence which the King had repofed in him, ordered all the troops, which could be got together, to affemble at Compiegne. Though the winter was well advanced, and had fet in with extreme rigour, he placed himfelf at their head, and took the field. By Henry's activity and the zeal of his fubjects, fo many foldiers had been raifed in the kingdom, and and fuch confiderable reinforcements had been drawn from Germany and Swifferland, as formed an army refpectable even in the eyes of a victorious enemy. Philip, alarmed at feeing it put in motion at fuch an uncommon feason, began to tremble for his new conquests, particularly St. Quintin, the fortifications of which were hitherto but imperfectly repaired.

But the Duke of Guife meditated a more important enterprize; and after amufing the enemy with threatening fuccefively different towns on the frontiers of Flanders, he turned fuddenly to the left, and invefted Calais with his whole army. Calais had been taken by the English under Edward III. and was the fruit of that monarch's glorious victory at Crecy. Being the only place that they retained of their ancient and extensive territories in France, and which opened to them, at all times, an eafy and fecure paffage into the heart of that kingdom, their keeping poffeffion of it foothed the pride of the one nation as much as it mortified the vanity of the other. Its fituation was naturally fo ftrong, and its fortifications deemed fo impregnable, that no monarch of France, how adventurous foever, had been bold enough to attack it. Even when the domestick strength of England was broken and exhausted by the U2 bloody

He invefts Calais. 1558. January 1ft.

29 I BOOKXII.

1557.

Воок XII. 1558.

292 bloody wars between the houses of York and Lancaster, and its attention entirely diverted from foreign objects, Calais had remained undisturbed and unthreatened. Mary and her council, composed chiefly of ecclesiafticks, unacquainted with military affairs, and whofe whole attention was turned towards extirpating herefy out of the kingdom, had not only neglected to take any precautions for the fafety of this important place, but feemed to think that the reputation of its ftrength alone was fufficient for its fecurity. Full of this opinion, they ventured, even after the declaration of war, to continue a practice which the low ftate of the Queen's finances had introduced in times of peace. As the country adjacent to Calais was overflowed during the winter, and the marfhes around it became impaffable, except by one avenue, which the forts of St. Agatha and Newnham-bridge commanded, it had been the cuftom of the English to dismis the greater part of the garrifon towards the end of autumn, and to replace it in the fpring. In vain did Lord Wentworth, the governor of Calais, remonftrate against this ill-timed parfimony, and reprefent the possibility of his being attacked fuddenly, while he had not troops fufficient to man the works. The privy-council treated these remonstrances with scorn, as if they had floy ed

Its defenceleis flate.

flowed from the timidity or the rapaciousness of BOOK XII. the governor; and fome of them, with that confidence which is the companion of ignorance, boafted that they would defend Calais with their white rods against any enemy who should approach it during winter '. In vain did Philip, who had paffed through Calais as he returned from England to the Netherlands, warn the Queen of the danger to which it was exposed ; and acquainting her with what was neceffary for its fecurity, in vain did he offer to reinforce the garrifon during winter with a detachment of his own troops. Mary's counfellors, though obfequious to her in all points wherein religion was concerned, diftrufted, as much as the reft of their countrymen, every proposition that came from her hufband; and fuspecting this to be an artifice of Philip's, in order to gain the command of the town, they neglected his intelligence, declined his offer, and left Calais with lefs than a fourth of the men requifite for its défence.

IT was his knowledge of this which en- Guisepushes couraged the Duke of Guife to venture on an with vigour. enterprize, that furprifed his own countrymen, no lefs than his enemies. As he knew that its fuccess depended on conducting his operations r Carte, iii. 345.

U 2

with the fiege

293 1558.

294

BCOK XII. 1358. with fuch rapidity as would afford the English no time for throwing relief into the town by fea, and prevent Philip from giving him any interruption by land, he pushed the attack with a degree of vigour little known in carrying on fieges, during that age. He drove the English from fort St. Agatha at the first affault. He obliged them to abandon the fort of Newnhambridge after defending it three days. He took the caftle which commanded the harbour by ftorm; and on the eighth day after he appeared, before Calais, compelled the governor to furrender, as his feeble garrifon, which did not exceed five hundred men, was worn out with the fatigue of fultaining fo many attacks, and defending fuch extensive works.

Takes the town, and likewife Guifnes and Hames. THE Duke of Guife, without allowing the English time to recover from the consternation occasioned by this blow, immediately invested Guisnes, the garrison of which, though more numerous, defended itself with less vigour, and after standing one brisk assault, gave up the town. The castle of Hames was abandoned by the troops posted there, without waiting the approach of the enemy.

The splendour and effect of these conquefts. THUS, in a few days, during the depth of winter, and at a time when the fatal battle of St.

St. Quintin had fo depressed the fanguine spirit of the French, that their utmost aim was to protect their own country, without dreaming of making conquests on the enemy, the enterprizing valour of one man drove the English out of Calais, after they had held it two hundred and ten years, and deprived them of every foot of land in a kingdom, where their dominions had been once fo extensive. This exploit, at the fame time that it gave an high idea of the power and refources of France to all Europe, fet the Duke of Guise, in the opinion of his countrymen, far above all the generals of the age. They celebrated his conquests with immoderate transports of joy; while the English gave vent to all the paffions, which animate a high fpirited people, when any great national calamity is manifeftly owing to the ill conduct of their rulers. Mary and her ministers, formerly odious, were now contemptible in their eyes. All the terrors of her fevere and arbitrary administration could not restrain them from uttering execrations and threats against thofe, who having wantonly involved the nation in a quarrel wherein it was nowife interested, had by their negligence or incapacity brought irreparable difgrace on their country, and loft the most valuable possession belonging to the English crown.

THE

295 Воок XII. 1558.

296 BOOKXII. 1558.

THE French King imitated the conduct of its former conqueror, Edward III. with regard to Calais. He commanded all the English inhabitants to quit the town, and giving their houses to his own subjects, whom he allured to fettle there by granting them various immunities, he left a numerous garrison, under an experienced governor, for their defence. After this, his victorious army went into quarters of refreshment, and the usual inaction of winter returned.

Feb. 24. Charles's refignation of the Imperial crown.

DURING these various operations, Ferdinand affembled the college of Electors at Frankfort, in order to lay before them the deed whereby Charles V. had refigned the Imperial crown, and transferred it to him. This he had hitherto delayed on account of fome difficulties which had occurred concerning the formalities requifite in supplying a vacancy occasioned by an event, to which there was no parallel in the annals of the Empire. These being at length adjusted, the Prince of Orange executed the commission with which he had been entrusted by Charles; the Electors accepted of his refignation; declared Ferdinand his lawful fucceffor; and put him in poffession of all the enfigns of the Imperial dignity.

BUT

But when the new Emperor fent Guíman his chancellor, to acquaint the Pope with this transaction, to teffify his reverence towards the Holy See, and to fignify that, according to form, he would foon difpatch an ambaffador extraordinary to treat with his holinefs concerning his coronation; Paul, whom neither experience nor difappointments could teach to bring down his lofty ideas of the papal prerogative to fuch a moderate standard as fuited the genius of the times, refused to admit the envoy into his prefence, and declared all the proceedings at Frankfort irregular and invalid. He contended that the Pope, as the vicegerent of Chrift, was entrufted with the keys both of celeftial and terrestrial government; that from him the Imperial jurifdiction was derived; that though his predeceffors had authorized the electors to chufe an Emperor whom the Holy See confirmed, this privilege was confined to those cafes when a vacancy was occafioned by death; that the inftrument of Charles's relignation had been prefented in an improper court, as it belonged to the Pope alone to reject or to accept of it, and to nominate a person to fill the Imperial throne; that, fetting alide all these objections, Ferdinand's election laboured under two defects which alone were fufficient to render it void, for the Protestant Electors had been admitted to vote,

297

Bee

BOOKXII.

1558. The Pope refufes to acknowledge Ferdinand as Emperar.

vote, though by their apoftacy from the catho-BOOKXII. lick faith, they had forfeited that and every other privilege of the electoral office; and Ferdinand, by ratifying the conceffions of feveral Diets in favour of hereticks, had rendered himfelf unworthy of the Imperial dignity, which was inflituted for the protection, not for the destruction of the church. But after thundering out these extravagant maxims, he added with an appearance of condescension, that if Ferdinand would renounce all title to the Imperial crown, founded on the election at Frankfort, make professions of repentance for his past conduct, and fupplicate him, with due humility, to confirm Charles's refignation, as well as his affumption to the Empire, he might expect every mark of favour from his paternal clemency and goodnefs. Gufman, though he had forefeen confiderable difficulties in his negociation with the Pope, little expected that he would have . revived those antiquated and wild pretensions, which aftonished him fo much, that he hardly knew in what tone he ought to reply. He prudently declined entering into any controverfy concerning the nature, or extent of the papal jurifdiction, and confining himfelf to the political confiderations, which should determine the Pope to recognife an Emperor already in pofseffion, he endeavoured to place them in fuch a light, light, as he imagined could fcarcely fail to BOOKXII. ftrike Paul, if he were not altogether blind to his own interest. Philip seconded Gusman's arguments with great earneftnefs, by an anibaffador, whom he fent to Rome on purpofe, and befought the Pope to defift from claims fo unfeatonable, as might not only irritate and alarm Ferdinand and the Princes of the Empire, but furnish the enemies of the Holy See with a new reason for representing its jurifdiction as incompatible with the rights of Princes, and fubverfive of all civil authority. But Paul, who deemed it a crime to attend to any confideration fuggefted by human prudence or policy, when he thought himfelf called upon to affert the pre-rogatives of the Papal See, remained inflexible ; and during his pontificate, Ferdinand was not acknowledged as Emperor by the court of Rome '.

1558.

WHILE Henry was intent upon his prepara- Henry entions for the approaching campaign, he received excite the accounts of the iffue of his negociations in Scot- England, land. Long experience having at last taught the Scots the imprudence of involving their country in every quarrel between France and England, neither the folicitations of his ambaffador, nor the address and authority of the Queen-* Godleveus de Abdicat. Car. V. ap. Gold. polit. Imper. 392. Palav. lib. xiii. 189. Ribier, ii, 746. 759.

deavours to Scots againft

299 1558,

regent,

300

1558.

BOOKXII. regent, could prevail on them to take arms against a kingdom, with which they were at peace. On this occasion the ardour of a martial nobility and of a turbulent people was reftrained by regard for the publick intereft and tranquillity, which, in former deliberations of this kind, had been feldom attended to by a nation always prone to rufh into every new war. But though the Scots adhered with fleadinefs to their pacifick fystem, they were extremely ready to gratify the French King in another particular, which he had given in charge to his ambaffador.

Marriage of the Dauphin with the Queen of Scots.

The young Queen of Scots had been affianced to the Dauphin in the year one thousand five hundred and forty-eight, and having been educated fince that time in the court of France, fhe had grown up to be the most amiable, and one of the most accomplished Princesses of that age. Henry demanded the confent of her fubjects to the celebration of the marriage, and a parliament which was held for that purpofe, appointed eight commiffioners to reprefent the whole body of the nation at that folemnity, with power to fign fuch deeds as might be requifite before it was concluded. In fettling the articles of the marriage, the Scots took every precaution that prudence could dictate, in order to preferve the liberty and independence of of their country; while the French used every art to fecure to the Dauphin the conduct of affairs during the Queen's life, and the fucceffion of the crown on the event of her demife. The marriage was celebrated with pomp fuit- April 14. able to the dignity of the parties, and the magnificence of a court at that time the most splendid in Europe<sup>t</sup>. Thus Henry, in the courfe of a few months, had the glory of recovering an important poffeffion which had anciently belonged to the crown of France, and of adding to it the acquifition of a new kingdom. By this event, too, the Duke of Guife acquired new confideration and importance; the marriage of his niece to the apparent heir of the crown, raising him to far beyond the condition of other fubjects, as feemed to render the credit which he had gained by his great actions, no lefs permanent than it was extensive.

WHEN the campaign opened, foon after the The cam-Dauphin's marriage, the Duke of Guife was paign openplaced at the head of the army, with the fame unlimited powers as formerly. Henry had received fuch liberal fupplies from his fubjects, that the troops under his command were both numerous and well appointed; while Philip,

* Keith's hiftory of Scotland, p. 73. Append. 13. Corps. Diplom. v. 21. exhaufted

BOOK XII. 1558.

301

Воок XII. 1558.

302

exhausted by the extraordinary efforts of the preceding year, had been obliged to difmits for many of his forces during the winter, that he could not bring an army into the field capable of making head against the enemy. The Duke of Guife did not lose the favourable opportunity which his superiority afforded him. He invested Thionville in the dutchy of Luxemburg, one of the strongest towns on the frontier of the Netherlands, and of great importance to France by its neighbourhood to Metz; and, notwithstanding the obstinate valour with which it was defended, he forced it to capitulate after a fiege of three weeks ".

June 22.

The French army defeated at Gravelines, But the fuccels of this enterprize, which it was expected would lead to other conquefts, was more than counterbalanced by an event that happened in another part of the Low-Countries. The Marechal de Termes, governor of Calais, having penetrated into Flanders without oppofition, invefted Dunkirk with an army of fourteen thousand men, and took it by florm on the fifth day of the fiege. Hence he advanced towards Nieuport, which must have foon fallen into his hands, if the approach of the Count of Egmont with a fuperior army had not made it prudent to retreat. The French troops were fo much encumbered with the Book XII. booty which they had got at Dunkirk, or by ravaging the open country, that they moved flowly; and Egmont, who had left his heavy baggage and artillery behind him, marched with fuch rapidity, that he came up with them near. Gravelines, and attacked them with the utmost impetuosity. De Termes, who had the choice of the ground, having posted his troops to advantage in the angle formed by the mouth of the river Aa and the fea, received him with great firmnefs. Victory remained for fome time in fuspenie, the desperate valour of the French. who forefaw the unavoidable deftruction that must follow upon a rout in an enemy's country, counterbalancing the fuperior number of the Flemings, when one of those accidents to which human prudence does not extend, decided the contefl in favour of the latter. A fquadron of English ships of war, which was cruizing on the coaft, being drawn by the noife of the firing towards the place of the engagement, entered the river Aa, and turned its great guns against the right wing of the French, with fuch effect as immediately broke that body, and fpread terror and confusion through the whole army. The Flemings, to whom affiftance, fo unexpected and fo feasonable, gave fresh spirit, redoubled their efforts, that they might not lofe the ad-İ vantage 303: 1558.

" Thuan, lib. xx. 690.

troops

304

BOOK XII. 1558. vantage which fortune had prefented them, or give the enemy time to recover from their confternation, and the rout of the French foon became univerfal. Near two thousand were killed on the fpot; a greater number fell by the hands of the peasants, who, in revenge for the cruelty with which their country had been plundered, purfued the fugitives and maffacred them without mercy; the reft were taken prisoners, together with De Termes their general, and many officers of diffinction <sup>x</sup>.

The Duke of Guife oppofed to the victorious army.

THIS fignal victory, for which the Count of Egmont was afterwards fo ill requited by Philip, obliged the Duke of Guife to relinquish all other schemes, and to hasten towards the frontier of Picardy, that he might oppose the progress of the enemy in that province. This difaster reflected new luftre on his reputation, and once more turned the eyes of his countrymen towards him, as the only general on whole arms victory always attended, and in whofe conduct as well as good fortune they could confide in every danger. Henry reinforced Guife's army with fo many troops drawn from the adjacent garrifons, that it foon amounted to forty thousand men. That of the enemy, after the junction of Egmont with the Duke of Savoy, was not inferior in * Thuan. lib. xx. 694.

number

humber. They encamped at the diftance of a BOOK XII. few leagues from one another; and each monarch having joined his respective army, it was expected, after the vicifitudes of good and bad fuccefs during this and the former campaign, that a decifive battle would at last determine which of the rivals should take the ascendant for the future, and give law to Europe. But though both had it in their power, neither of them difcovered any inclination to bring the determination of fuch an important point to depend upon the uncertain and fortuitous iffue of a fingle battle. The fatal engagements at St. Quintin and Gravelines were too recent to be fo foon forgotten, and the prospect of encountering the fame troops, commanded by the fame generals who had twice triumphed over his arms, infpired Henry with a degree of caution which was not common to him. Philip, of a genius averfe to bold operations in war, naturally leaned to cautious meafures, and would hazard nothing against a general fo fortunate and fuccessful as the Duke of Guise. Both monarchs, as if by agreement, flood on the defenfive, and fortifying their camps carefully, avoided every skirmish or rencounter that might bring on a general engagement.

X

VOL. IV.

WHILE

305 1558.

306

ΒοοκΧΠ.

1558. Both monarchs begin to defire peace.

THE REIGN OF THE

WHILE the armies continued in this inaction. peace began to be mentioned in each camp, and both Henry and Philip difcovered an inclination to liften to any overture that tended to re-eftablifh it. The kingdoms of France and Spain had been engaged during half a century in almost continual wars, carried on at great expence and productive of no confiderable advantage to either. Exhaufted by extraordinary and uncealing efforts, which far exceeded those to which the nations of Europe had been accuftomed before the rivalship between Charles V. and Francis I. both nations longed fo much for an interval of repose, in order to recruit their ftrength, that their fovereigns drew from them with difficulty the fupplies neceffary for carrying on hostilities. The private inclinations of both the Kings concurred with those of their people. Philip was prompted to wifh for peace by his fond defire of returning to Spain. Accuftomed from his infancy to the climate and manners of that country, he was attached to it with fuch extreme predilection, that he was unhappy in any other part of his dominions. But as he could not quit the Low Countries, either with decency or fafety, and venture on a voyage to Spain, during the continuance of war, the prospect of a pacification which would put it in in his power to execute his favourite scheme, Book XII. was highly acceptable. Henry was no lefs defirous of being delivered from the burden, and avocations of war, that he might have leifure to turn all his attention, and bend the whole force of his government, towards fuppreffing the opinions of the Reformers, which were fpreading with fuch rapidity in Paris and other great towns of France, that they began to grow formidable to the effablished church.

BESIDES these publick and avowed confiderations arifing from the flate of the two hoftile kingdoms, or from the wifhes of their refpective monarchs, there was a fecret intrigue carried on in the court of France, which contributed as much as either of the other, to haften and to facilitate the negociation of a peace. The Conftable Montmorency, during his captivity, beheld the rapid fuccefs and growing favour of the Duke of Guile, with envious folicitude. Every advantage gained by his rival he confidered as a fresh wound to his own reputation, and he knew with what malevolent addrefs it would be improved to diminish his credit with the King, and to augment that of the Duke of Guife. These arts, he was afraid, might, by degrees, work on the easy and ductile mind of Henry, fo as to efface all remains of X 2 his 307 1558.

An intrigue in the court of France facilitates it.

308

Воок XII. 1558. his ancient affection towards himfelf. But he could not difcover any remedy for this, uniefs he were allowed to return home, that he might try whether by his prefence he could defeat the artifices of his enemies, and revive those warm and tender fentiments which had long attached Henry to him, with a confidence fo entire, as refembled rather the cordiality of private friendfhip, than the cold and felfifh connexion between a monarch and one of his courtiers. While Montmorency was forming fchemes and wifhes for his return to France with much anxiety of mind, but with little hope of fuccefs, an unexpected incident prepared the way for it. The Cardinal of Lorrain, who had fhared with his brother in the King's favour, and participated of the power which that conferred, did not bear profperity with the fame difcretion as the Duke of Guife. Intoxicated with their good fortune, he forgot how much they had been indebted for their prefent elevation to their connexions with the Dutchefs of Valentinois, and vainly afcribed all to the extraordinary merit of their family. This led him not only to neglect his benefactrefs, but to thwart her fchemes, and to talk with a farcaftick liberty of her character and perfon. That fingular woman, who, if we may believe contemporary writers, retained the beauty and charms of youth youth at the age of threefcore, and on whom it is certain that Henry still doated with all the fondnefs of love, felt this injury with fenfibility, and fet herfelf with eagerness to revenge it. As there was no method of fupplanting the Princes of Lorrain fo effectually as by a coalition of interests with the Constable, she proposed the marriage of her grand-daughter with one of his fons, as the bond of their future union, and Montmorency readily gave his confent to the match. Having thus cemented their alliance, the Dutchefs employed all her influence with the King, in order to confirm his inclinations towards peace, and induce him to take the fteps neceffary for attaining it. She infinuated that any overture of that kind would come with great propriety from the Conftable, and if committed to the conduct of his prudence, could hardly fail of fuccefs.

HESRY, long accuftomed to devolve all affairs of importance to the Conftable, and needing only this encouragement to return to his ancient habits, wrote to him immediately with his ufual familiarity and affection, empowering him at the fame time to take the first opportunity of founding Philip and his ministers with regard to peace. Montmorency made his application to Philip by the most proper channel. He opened X 3

Henry commits the negociation to Montmorency.

309

BOOK XII.

1558.

Воок XII. 1558.

310

himfelf to the Duke of Savoy, who, notwithftanding the height of preferment to which he had been raifed, and the military glory which he had acquired in the Spanish fervice, was weary of remaining in exile, and languished to return into his dominions. As there was no profpect of his recovering poffeffion of them by force of arms, he confidered a definitive treaty of peace between France and Spain, as the only event by which he could hope to obtain reftitu-Being no ftranger to Philip's private tion. wifhes with regard to peace, he eafily prevailed on him not only to difcover a difpofition on his part towards accommodation, but to permit Montmorency to return, on his parole, to France, that he might confirm his own fovereign in his pacifick fentiments. Henry received the Constable with the most flattering marks of regard; absence, instead of having abated or extinguished the Monarch's friendship, seemed to have given it new ardour. Montmorency, from the moment of his appearance in court, affumed, if poffible, a higher place than ever in his affection, and a more perfect ascendant over his mind. The Cardinal of Lorrain and Duke of Guife prudently gave way to a tide of favour too ftrong for them to oppofe, and confining themfelves to their proper departments, permitted, without any ftruggle, the Conftable and Dutchefs of Valentinois 3

Valentinois to direct publick affairs at their plea. Book XII. fure. They foon prevailed on the King to nominate plenipotentiaries to treat of peace. Philip did the fame. The abbey of Cercamp was fixed on as the place of congress; and all military operations were immediately terminated by a fufpenfion of arms.

WHILE thefe preliminary fteps were taking D-ath of towards a treaty which reftored tranquillity to Europe, Charles V. whofe ambition had fo long difturbed it, ended his days in the monastery of St. Juftus. When Charles entered this retreat, he formed fuch a plan of life for himfelf, as would have fuited the condition of a private gentleman of a moderate fortune. His table was neat but plain; his domefticks few; his intercourfe with them familiar; all the cumberfome and ceremonious forms of attendance on his perfoa were entirely abolished, as destructive of that focial eafe and tranquillity which he courted in order to footh the remainder of his days. As the mildness of the climate, together with his deliverance from the burdens and cares of government, procured him, at first, a confiderable remiffion from the acute pains with which he had been long tormented, he enjoyed, perhaps, more complete fatisfaction in this humble folicitude, than all his grandeur had ever X 4 yielded 311 1558.

Charles V.

Воок XII. 1558. yielded him. The ambitious thoughts and projects which had fo long engroffed and difquieted him, were quite effaced from his mind: Far from taking any part in the political transactions of the Princes of Europe, he reftrained his curiofity even from any inquiry concerning them; and he feemed to view the bufy fcene which he had abandoned with all the contempt and indifference arifing from his thorough experience of its vanity, as well as from the pleafing reflection of having difentangled himfelf from its cares.

His amufements in his retreat.

OTHER amusements, and other objects now occupied him. Sometimes he cultivated the plants in his garden with his own hands; fometimes he rode out to the neighbouring wood on a little horfe, the only one that he kept, attended by a fingle fervant on foot. When his infirmities confined him to his apartment, which often happened, and deprived him of these more active recreations, he either admitted a few gentlemen who refided near the monastery to vifit him, and entertained them familiarly at his table; or he employed himfelf in fludying mechanical principles and in forming curious works of mechanism, of which he had always been remarkably fond, and to which his genius was peculiarly turned. With this view he had engaged Turriano, one of the most ingenious artifts artifts of that age, to accompany him in his BOOKXII. retreat. He laboured together with him in framing models of the most useful machines, as well as in making experiments with regard to their respective powers, and it was not feldom that the ideas of the monarch affifted or perfected the inventions of the artift. He relieved his mind, at intervals, with flighter and more fantaftick works of mechanism, in fashioning puppers, which, by the ftructure of internal fprings, mimicked the geftures and actions of men, to the no fmall aftonishment of the ignorant monks, who beholding movements, which they could not comprehend, fometimes diftrufted their own fenfes, and fometimes fufpected Charles and Turriano of being in compact with invisible powers. He was particularly curious with regard to the construction of clocks and watches; and having found, after repeated trials, that he could not bring any two of them to go exactly alike, he reflected, it is faid, with a mixture of furprife as well as regret on his own folly, in having beftowed fo much time and labour on the more vain attempt of bringing mankind to a precife uniformity of fentiment concerning the intricate and mysterious doctrines of religion.

312

But in what manner foever Charles difposed of the reft of his time, he conftantly referved a confiderable

His more ferious occupations.

313 1558.

314 BookXII.

1558.

confiderable portion of it for religious exercifes. He regularly attended divine fervice in the chapel of the monastery, every morning and evening; he took great pleafure in reading books of devotion, particularly the works of St. Augustine and St. Bernard; and conversed much with his confessor, and the prior of the monastery on pious subjects. Thus did Charles pass the first year of his retreat, in a manner not unbecoming a man perfectly difengaged from the affairs of the prefent life, and ftanding on the confines of a future world, either in innocent amusements, which foothed his pains, and relieved a mind worn out with exceffive application to bufinefs; or in devout occupations, which he deemed neceffary in preparing for another state.

The caufes of his death. But about fix months before his death, the gout, after a longer intermission than usual, returned with a proportional increase of violence. His shattered constitution had not vigour enough remaining to withstand such a shock. It enfeebled his mind as much as his body, and from this period we hardly difcern any traces of that found and masculine understanding, which distinguissed Charles among his contemporaries. An illiberal and timid superstition depressed his spirit. He had no reliss for amufements of any kind, kind. He endeavoured to conform, in his man- BookXII. ner of living, to all the rigour of monaftick aufterity. He defired no other fociety than that of monks, and was almost continually employed with them in chanting the hymns of the Miffal. As an expiation for his fins, he gave himfelf the difcipline in fecret with fuch feverity, that the whip of cords which he employed as the instrument of his punishment, was found after his decease tinged with his blood. Nor was he fatisfied with these acts of mortification, which, however fevere, were not unexampled. The timorous and distrustful folicitude which always accompanies superstition, still continued to difquiet him, and depreciating all that he had done, prompted him to aim at fomething extraordinary, at fome new and fingular act of piety that would display his zeal, and merit the favour of heaven. The act on which he fixed was as wild and uncommon, as any that fuperfition ever fuggested to a weak and difordered fancy. He refolved to celebrate his own obfequies before his death. He ordered his tomb to be erected in the chapel of the monaftery. His domefticks marched thither in funeral proceffion, with black tapers in their hands. He himfelf followed in his shroud. He was laid in his coffin, with much folemnity. The fervice for the dead was chanted, and Charles joined joined in the prayers which were offered up for BOOKXII. the reft of his foul, mingling his tears with those which his attendants shed, as if they had been celebrating a real funeral. The ceremony clofed with fprinkling holy water on the coffin in the usual form, and all the affiftants retiring, the doors of the chapel were fhut. Then Charles rofe out of the coffin and withdrew to his apartment, full of those awful sentiments, which fuch a fingular folemnity was calculated to infpire. But either the fatiguing length of the ceremony, or the impreffion which this image of death left on his mind affected him fo much, that next day he was feized with a fever. His feeble frame could not long refift its violence, and he expired on the twenty-first of September, after a life of fifty-eight years, fix months, and twentyfive days y.

His character.

As Charles was the first Prince of the age in rank and dignity, the part which he acted, whether we confider the greatnefs, the variety, or the fuccefs of his undertakings, was the moft confpicuous. It is from an attentive observation of his conduct, not from the exaggerated praises of the Spanish historians, or the undif-y Strada de Bello Belg. lib. i. p. 11. Thuan. 723. Sandov. ii. 609, &c. Miniana Contin. Marianæ, vol. iv. 216. Vera y Zuniga vida de Carlos, p. 111.

tinguishing

316

tinguishing cenfure of the French, that a just Book XII. idea of Charles's genius and abilities is to be collected. He posseffed qualities fo peculiar, as ftrongly mark his character, and not only diftinguish 'him from the Princes who were his contemporaries, but account for that fuperiority over them which he fo long maintained. In forming his fchemes, he was, by nature, as well as by habit, cautious and confiderate. Born with talents which unfolded themfelves flowly, and were late in attaining maturity, he was accustomed to ponder every subject that demanded his confideration with a careful and deliberate attention. He bent the whole force of his mind towards it, and dwelling upon it with a ferious application, undiverted by pleafure, and hardly relaxed by any amufement, he revolved it, in filence, in his own breast. He then communicated the matter to his ministers, and after hearing their opinions, took his refolution with a decifive firmnefs, which feldom follows fuch flow and feemingly hefitating confultations. Of confequence, Charles's measures, instead of refembling the defultory and irregular fallies of Henry VIII. or Francis I. had the appearance of a confiftent fystem, in which all the parts were arranged, the effects were forefeen, and the accidents were provided for. His promptitude in execution was no lefs remarkable than his patience in deliberation.

BookXII.

1558.

deliberation. He confulted with phlegm, but he acted with vigour; and did not difcover greater fagacity in his choice of the measures which it was proper to purfue, than fertility of genius in finding out the means for rendering his purfuit of them fuccefsful. Though he had naturally fo little of the martial turn, that during the most ardent and bustling period of life he remained in the cabinet inactive, yet when he chofe at length to appear at the head of his armies, his mind was fo formed for vigorous exertions in every direction, that he acquired fuch knowledge in the art of war, and fuch talents for command, as rendered him equal in reputation and fuccefs to the most able generals of the age. But Charles poffeffed, in the most eminent degree, the fcience which is of greatest importance to a monarch, that of knowing men, and of adapting their talents to the various departments which he allotted to them. From the death of Chievres to the end of his reign, he employed no general in the field, no minister in the cabinet, no ambaffador to a foreign court, no governor of a province, whole abilities were inadequate to the truft which he reposed in them. Though deflitute of that bewitching affability of manners, which gained Francis the hearts of all who approached his perfon, he was no ftranger to the virtues which fecure fidelity and attachment.

ment. He placed unbounded confidence in his BookXII. generals; he rewarded their fervices with munificence; he neither envied their fame, nor difcovered any jealoufy of their power. Almost all the generals who conducted his armies, may be placed on a level with those illustrious perfonages who have attained the higheft eminence of military glory; and his advantages over his rivals, are to be afcribed fo manifeftly to the fuperior abilities of the commanders whom he fet in opposition to them, that this might feem to detract, in some degree, from his own merit, if the talent of difcovering and employing fuch inftruments were not the most undoubted proof of a capacity for government.

THERE were, nevertheless, defects in his political character which must confiderably abate the admiration due to his extraordinary talents. Charles's ambition was infatiable; and though there feems to be no foundation for an opinion prevalent in his own age, that he had formed the chimerical project of eftablishing an univerfal monarchy in Europe, it is certain that his defire of being diftinguished as a conqueror, involved him in continual wars, which not only exhaufted and oppreffed his fubjects, but left him little leifure for giving attention to the interior police and improvement of his kingdoms, the 319

320

Book XII.

1558.

the great objects of every Prince who makes the happiness of his people the end of his government. Charles, at a very early period of life, having added the Imperial crown to the kingdoms of Spain, and to the hereditary dominions of the houfes of Auftria and Burgundy, this opened to him fuch a vaft field of enterprize, and engaged him in fchemes fo complicated as well as arduous, that feeling his power to be unequal to the execution of them, he had often recourfe to low artifices unbecoming his fuperior talents, and fometimes ventured on fuch deviations from integrity, as were difhonourable in a great Prince. His infidious and fraudulent policy appeared more confpicuous, and was rendered more odious, by a comparison with the open and undefigning character of his contemporaries Francis I. and Henry VIII. This difference, though occafioned chiefly by the diversity of their tempers, must be afcribed, in some degree, to fuch an opposition in the principles of their political conduct, as affords fome excuse for this defect in Charles's behaviour, though it cannot ferve as a justification of it. Francis and Henry feldom acted but from the impulfe of their paffions, and rushed headlong towards the object in view. Charles's measures, being the refult of cool reflection, were difposed into a regular fystem, and carried on upon a concerted plan.

plan. Perfons who act in the former manner, naturally purfue the end in view, without affuming any difguife, or difplaying much addrefs. Such as hold the latter course, are apt, in forming as well as in executing their defigns, to employ fuch refinements as always lead to artifice in conduct, and often degenerate into deceit.

THE circumstances transmitted to us, with refpect to Charles's private deportment and character, are fewer and lefs interefting, than might have been expected from the great number of authors who have undertaken to write an account of his life. These are not the object of this hiftory, which aims more at reprefenting the great transactions of the reign of Charles V. than at delineating his private virtues or defects.

THE plenipotentiaries of France, Spain, and Conference England, continued their conferences at Cercamp; and though each of them, with the ufual art of negociators, made at first very high demands in the name of their respective courts, yet as they were all equally defirous of peace. they would have confented reciprocally to fuch abatements and reftrictions of their claims, as must have removed every obstacle to an accommodation. The death of Charles V. was a new VOL. IV. Y motive peace.

321 BOOK XII. 1:58.

Воок XiI.

Nov. 17. Death of

Mary of England.

motive with Philip to haften the conclusion of a treaty, as it increased his impatience for returning into Spain, where there was now no perfon greater or more illustrious than himself. But, in fpite of the concurring wifhes of all the parties interested, an event happened which occafioned an unavoidable delay in their negociations. About a month after the opening of the conferences at Cercamp, Mary of England ended her fhort and inglorious reign, and Elizabeth her fifter was immediately proclaimed Queen by the English with universal joy. As the powers of the English plenipotentiaries expired on the death of their miltrefs, they could not proceed until they received a commission and instructions from their new fovereign.

Henry and Philip court Elizabeth her fucceffor. HENRY and Philip beheld Elizabeth's elevation to the throne with equal folicitude. As during Mary's jealous administration, under the most difficult circumstances, and in a fituation extremely delicate, that Princes's had conducted herfelf with prudence and address far exceeding her years, they had conceived an high idea of her abilities, and already formed expectations of a reign very different from that of her fister. Equally fensible of the importance of gaining her favour, both monarchs fet themfelves with emulation to court it, and employed every art in in order to infinuate themfelves into her con- Book XII. fidence. Each of them had fomething meritorious, with regard to Elizabeth, to plead in his own behalf. Henry had offered her a retreat in his dominions, if the dread of her fifter's violence should force her to fly for fafety out of England. Philip, by his powerful interceffion, had prevented Mary from proceeding to the most fatal extremities against her. Fach of them endeavoured now, to avail himself of the circumstances in his favour. Henry wrote to Elizabeth foon after her acceffion, with the warmeft expressions of regard and friendship. He reprefented the war which had unhappily been kindled between their kingdoms, not as a national quarrel, but as the effect of Mary's blind partiality to her hufband and fond com pliance with all his wifhes. He entreated her to difengage herfelf from an alliance which had proved fo unfortunate to England, and to confent to a feparate peace with him, without mingling her interefts with those of Spain, from which they ought now to be altogether disjoined. Philip, on the other hand, unwilling to lofe his connexion with England, the importance of which, during a rupture with France, he had fo recently experienced, not only vied with Henry in declarations of efteem for Elizabeth, and in professions of his resolution to cul-Y 2 tivate

322

323 1558;

Всок XII. 15;8. tivate the firicteft amity with her, but, in order to confirm and perpetuate their union, he offered himfelf to her in marriage, and undertook to procure a dispensation from the Pope to that effect.

Elizabeth's deliberations concerning her conduct.

ELIZABETH weighed the propofals of the two Monarchs attentively, and with that provident difcernment of her true intereft which was confpicuous in all her deliberations. She gave fome encouragement to Henry's overture of a feparate negociation, because it opened a channel of correspondence with France, which she might find to be of great advantage, if Philip fhould not difcover fufficient zeal and folicitude for fecuring to her, proper terms in the joint treaty. But the ventured on this ftep with the most cautious referve, that she might not alarm Philip's fufpicious temper, and lofe an ally in attempting to gain an enemy z. Henry himfelf, by an unpardonable act of indifcretion, prevented her from carrying her intercourfe with him to fuch a length as might have offended or alienated Philip. At the very time when he was courting Elizabeth's friendship with the greatest affiduity, he yielded with an inconfiderate facility to the folicitations of the Princes of Lorrain, and allowed his daughter-in-law 2 Forbes, i. p. 4.

the

324

the Queen of Scots, to affume the title and -Book XII. arms of Queen of England. This ill-timed pretension, the source of many calamities to the unfortunate Queen of Scots, extinguished at once all the confidence that might have grown between Henry and Elizabeth, and left in its place distrust, resentment, and antipathy. Elizabeth found that fhe must unite her interests clofely with Philip's, and expect peace only from negociations carried on in conjunction with him ".

As the had granted a commission, mmediately after her acceffion, to the fame plenipotentiaries whom her fifter had employed, fhe now instructed them to act in every point in concert with the plenipotentiaries of Spain, and to take no ftep until they had previoufly confulted with them<sup>b</sup>. But though fhe deemed it prudent to affume this appearance of confidence in the Spanish Monarch, the knew precifely how far to carry it; and difcovered no inclination to accept of that extraordinary propofal of marriage which Philip had made to her. The English had expressed to openly their detestation of her fifter's choice of him, that it would have been highly imprudent to have exafperated

<sup>a</sup> Strype's Annals of the Reformation, i. 11. Carte's Hift. of Eng. vol. iii. p. 375. <sup>b</sup> Forbes' full View, i. p. 37. 40.

She empowers her nibaffedors to treat of peace.

them

326 BOOKXII. 1558.

them by renewing that odious alliance. She was too well acquainted with Philip's harfh imperious temper, to think of him for a husband. Nor could fhe admit a difpenfation from the Pope to be fufficient to authorize her marrying him, without condemning her father's divorce from Catharine of Arragon, and acknowledging of confequence that her mother's marriage was null, and her own birth illegitimate. But though fhe determined not to yield to Philip's addreffes, the fituation of her affairs rendered it dangerous to reject them; fhe returned her answer, therefore, in terms which were evalive, but fo tempered with respect, that though they gave him no reason to be secure of fuccess, they did not altogether extinguish his hopes.

Negociat'ons at Cateau-Cambrefis.

1559. February 6. with which fhe concealed her fentiments and intentions concerning religion, for fome time after her acceffion, fhe fo far gained upon Philip, that he warmly efpoufed her intereft in the conferences which were renewed at Cercamp, and afterwards removed to Cateau-Cambrefis. A definitive treaty, which was to adjuft the claims and pretenfions of fo many Princes, required the examination of fuch a variety of intricate points, and led to fuch infinite and minute details, as drew out the negociations to a great a great length. But the conftable Montmorency exerted himfelf with fuch indefatigable zeal and induftry, repairing alternately to the courts of Paris and Bruffels, in order to obviate or remove every difficulty, that all points in difpute were adjusted at length in fuch a manner, as to give entire fatisfaction in every particular to Henry and Philip; and the last hand was ready to be put to the treaty between them.

By this artifice, as well as by the prudence

THE claims of England remained as the only obstacle to retard it. Elizabeth demanded the reflitution of Calais, in the most peremptory tone, as an effential condition of her confenting to peace; Henry refused to give up that important conqueft; and both feemed to have taken their refolution with unalterable firmnefs. Philip warmly fupported Elizabeth's pretenfions to Calais, not merely from a principle of equity towards the English nation, that he might appear to have contributed to their recovering what they had loft by efpoufing his caufe; nor folely with a view of foothing Elizabeth by this manifestation of zeal for her interest; but in order to render France less formidable, by fecuring to her ancient enemy this eafy access into the heart of the kingdom. The earnestnefs, however, with which he feconded the arguments of the English plenipotentiaries, Y 4 foon

327 ВоокXII. 1559.

Difficulties with regard to the claims of England.

328 ВоокХ:I.

1559.

foon began to relax. During the course of the negociation, Elizabeth, who now felt herfelf firmly feated on her throne, began to take fuch open and vigorous measures not only for overturning all that her fifter had done in favour of popery, but for eftablishing the protestant church on a firm foundation, as convinced Philip that his hopes of an union with her had been from the beginning vain, and were now defperate. From that period, his interpolitions in her favour became more cold and formal, flowing merely from regard to decorum, or from the confideration of remote political interefts. Elizabeth, having reafon to expect fuch an alteration in his conduct, quickly perceived it. But as nothing would have been of greater detriment to her people, or more inconfistent with her fchemes of domeflick administration, than the continuance of war, fhe faw the neceffity of fubmitting to fuch conditions as the fituation of her affairs imposed, and that fhe must reckon upon being deferted by an ally who was now united to her by a very feeble tie, if she did not speedily reduce her demands to what was moderate and attainable. She accordingly gave new inftructions to her ambaffadors; and Philip's plenipotentiaries acting as mediators between the French and them', e Forbes, i. 59.

an expedient was fallen upon, which, in fome degree, justified Elizabeth's departing from the rigour of her first demand with regard to Calais. All leffer articles were fettled without much difcuffion or delay. Philip, that he might not appear to have abandoned the English, infifted that the treaty between Henry and Elizabeth should be concluded in form, before that between the French monarch and him. The one was figned on the fecond day of April, the other on the day following.

THE treaty of peace between France and Eng- Articles of land contained no articles of real importance, but that which respected Calais. It was stipulated, That the King of France should retain poffeffion of that town, with all its dependencies, during eight years; That, at the expiration of that term, he should restore it to England; That in cafe of non-performance, he should forfeit five hundred thousand crowns, for the payment of which fum, feven or eight wealthy merchants, who were not his fubjects, fhould grant fecurity; That five perfons of diffinction fhould be given as hoftages until that fecurity were provided; That, although the forfeit of five hundred thousand crowns should be paid, the right of England to Calais should still remain entire in the fame manner as if the term of eight peace between France and England.

329 BOOKXII. 1559.

330 BOOKXII. 1559.

eight years were expired; That the King and Queen of Scotland fhould be included in the treaty; That if they, or the French King, fhould violate the peace by any hoftile action, Henry fhould be obliged inftantly to reftore Calais; That, on the other hand, if any breach of the treaty proceeded from Elizabeth, then Henry and the King and Queen of Scots were abfolved from all the engagements which they had come under by this treaty.

The views of both parties with respect to these,

NOTWITHSTANDING the fludied attention with which fo many precautions were taken, it is evident that Henry did not intend the reftitution of Calais, nor is it probable that Elizabeth expected it. It was hardly poffible that fhe could maintain, during the course of eight years, such perfect concord both with France and Scotland, as not to afford Henry fome pretext for alleging that fhe had violated the treaty. But even if that term fhould elapfe without any ground for complaint, Henry might then chufe to pay the fum ftipulated, and Elizabeth had no method of afferting her right but by force of arms. However, by throwing the articles in the treaty with regard to Calais into this form, Elizabeth fatisfied her subjects of every denomination; she gave men of discernment a striking proof of her address, in palliating what she could not prevent; 2 prevent; and amufed the multitude, to whom the ceffion of fuch an important place would have appeared altogether infamous, with the profpect of recovering in a flort time that favourite pofferfion.

THE expedient which Montmorency employed, in order to facilitate the conclusion of peace between France and Spain, was the negociating two treaties of marriage, one between Elizabeth, Henry's eldeft daughter, and Philip, who fupplanted his fon, the unfortunate Don Carlos, to whom that Princefs had been promifed in the former conferences at Cercamp; the other between Margaret, Henry's only fifter, and the Duke of Savoy. For feeble as the ties of blood often are among Princes, or how little foever they may regard them when pushed on to act by motives of ambition, they affume on other occasions the appearance of being to far influenced by thefe domeftick affections, as to employ them to juftify measures and concessions which they find to be neceffary, but know to be impolitick or difhonourable. Such was the use Henry made of the two marriages to which he gave his confent. Having fecured an honourable eftablishment for his fifter and his daughter, he, in confideration of these, granted terms both to Philip and the Duke of Savoy, of

33! BookXII. 1559.

An expedient which promotes peace between France and Spain.

Воок XII. 1559.

The terms of pacification,

. of which he would not, on any other account, have ventured to approve.

THE principal articles in the treaty between France and Spain were, That a fincere and perpetual amity should be established between the two crowns and their respective allies; That the two monarchs should labour in concert to procure the convocation of a general council, in order to check the progress of herefy, and reftore unity and concord to the Christian church; That all conquests made by either party, on this fide of the Alps, fince the commencement of the war in one thousand five hundred and fiftyone, fhould be mutually reftored; That the dutchy of Savoy, the principality of Piedmont, the country of Breffe, and all the other territories formerly subject to the Dukes of Savoy, fhould be reftored to Emanuel Philibert, immediately after the celebration of his marriage with Margaret of France, the towns of Turin, Quiers, Pignerol, Chivaz, and Villanova excepted, of which Henry should keep possession until his claims on that Prince, in right of his grandmother, should be heard and decided in courfe of law; That as long as Henry retained these places in his hands, Philip should be at liberty to keep garrifons in the towns of Vercelli and Afti; That the French King should immediately immediately evacuate all the places which he BOOKXII. held in Tuscany and the Sienese, and renounce all future pretenfions to them; that he should reftore the marquifate of Montferrat to the Duke of Mantua; that he should receive the Genoese into favour, and give up to them the towns which he had conquered in the island of Corfica; that none of the Princes or states, to whom these ceffions were made, should call their fubjects to account for any part of their conduct while under the dominion of their enemies, but should bury all past transactions in oblivion. The Pope, the Emperor, the Kings of Denmark, Sweden, Poland, Portugal, the King and Queen of Scots, and almost every Prince and state in Christendom, were comprehended in this pacification as the allies either of Henry or of Philip d.

332

Thus, by this famous treaty, peace was re- Which reestablished in Europe. All the causes of difcord which had fo long embroiled the powerful monarchs of France and Spain, which had transmitted hereditary quarrels and wars from Charles to Philip, and from Francis to Henry, feemed to be wholly removed, or finally terminated. The French alone complained of the unequal conditions of a treaty, into which an eftablishes tranguillity in Europe.

<sup>d</sup> Recueil des Traitez, tom. ii. 287.

ambitious

334 Воок XII. 1559.

ambitious minister, in order to recover his liberty, and an artful mistrefs, that the might gratify her referitment, had feduced their too eafy monarch. They exclaimed loudly against the folly of giving up to the enemies of France, an hundred and eighty-nine fortified places, in the Low-Countries or in Italy, in return for the three infignificant towns of St. Quintin, Ham, and Catelet. They confidered it as an indelible stain upon the glory of the nation, to renounce in one day territories fo extensive, and fo capable of being defended, that the enemy could not have hoped to wreft them out of their hands, after many years of victory and fucces.

The peace between France and Spain ratified.

Death of Henry. July 10.

BUT Henry, without regarding the fentiments of his people, or being moved by the remonftrances of his council, ratified the treaty, and executed with great fidelity whatever he had ftipulated to perform. The duke of Savoy repaired with a numerous retinue to Paris, in order to celebrate his marriage with Henry's fifter. The duke of Alva was fent to the fame capital, at the head of a splendid embasfy, to espouse Elizabeth in name of his master. Thev were received with extraordinary magnificence by the French court. Amidst the rejoicings and feftivities on that occasion, Henry's days were cut fhort by a fingular and tragical accident.

dent. His fon, Francis II. a Prince under age,' Book XII. of a weak conflitution, and of a mind still more feeble fucceeded him. Soon after, Paul ended his violent and imperious Pontificate, at enmity with all the world, and difgufted even with his own nephews. They, perfecuted by Philip, and deferted by the fucceeding Pope. whom they had raifed by their influence to the papal throne, were condemned to the punishment which their crimes and ambition had merited, and their death was as infamous as their lives had been criminal. Thus most of the perfonages, who had long fuftained the principal characters on the great theatre of Europe, disappeared about the same time. A more known period of history opens at this æra; other actors enter upon the ftage, with different views as well as different passions; new contests arofe, and new fchemes of ambition occupied and difquieted mankind.

UPON reviewing the transactions of any active period in the hiftory of civilized nations, the changes which are accomplished appear wonderfully difproportioned to the efforts which have been exerted. Conquests are never very extenfive or rapid, but among nations whole progrefs in improvement is extremely unequal. When Alexander the Great, at the head of a gallant people,

A general review of the whole period.

336

Book XII. people, of fimple manners, and formed to war by admirable military inflitutions, invaded a flate funk in luxury, and enervated by exceffive refinement; when Genchizcan and Tamerlane, with their armies of hardy barbarians, poured in upon nations, enfeebled by the climate in which they lived, or by the arts and commerce which they cultivated, thefe conquerors, like a torrent, fwept every thing before them, fubduing kingdoms and provinces in as fhort a space of time as was requifite to march through them. But when nations are in a ftate fimilar to each other, and keep equal pace in their advances towards refinement, they are not exposed to the calamity of fudden conquefts. Their acquifitions of knowledge, their progrefs in the art of war, their political fagacity and addrefs, are nearly equal. The fate of states in this situation, depends not on a fingle battle. Their internal refources are many and various. Nor are they themfelves alone interested in their own fafety, or active in their own defence. Other ftates interpofe, and balance any temporary advantage which either party may have acquired. After the fierceft and most lengthened contest, all the rival nations are exhaufted, none are conquered. At length a peace is concluded, which re-inftates each in poffession of almost the fame power and the fame territories.

Such

SUCH was the state of Europe during the reign of Charles V. No Prince was for much fuperior to the reft in power, as to render his efforts irrefiftible, and his conquefts eafy. No nation had made progrefs in improvement fo far beyond its neighbours, as to have acquired a very manifest pre-eminence. Each state derived fome advantage, or was fubject to fome inconvenience, from its fituation or its climate; each was diftinguished by fomething peculiar in the genius of its people, or the conftitution of its govern-But the advantages poffeffed by one ment. state, were counterbalanced by circumstances favourable to others; and this prevented any from attaining fuch fuperiority as might have been fatal to all. The nations of Europe in that age, as in the prefent, were like one great family; there were fome features common to all, which fixed a refemblance; there were certain peculiarities confpicuous in each, which marked a diffinction. But there was not among them that wide diverfity of character and of genius which, in almost every period of history, hath exalted the Europeans above the inhabitants of the other quarters of the globe, and feems to have destined the one to rule, and the to be proved other to obey.

But though the near refemblance and equality in improvement among the different nations VOL. IV. Z of

+ The is uncontroverlable.

BOOK XII. The nations of Europe in a fimilar flate during the fixteenth century.

"This remains

337

338

BOOK XII. A remarkable change in the flate of Europe, during the reign of Charles V.

THE REIGN OF THE

of Europe, prevented the reign of Charles V. from being diftinguished by fuch fudden and extensive conquests as occur in fome other periods of hiftory, yet, during the courfe of his administration, all the confiderable states in Europe fuffered a remarkable change in their political fituation, and felt the influence of events, which have not hitherto fpent their force, but ftill continue to operate in a greater or in a lefs degree. It was during his reign, and in confe-. quence of the perpetual efforts to which his enterprizing ambition roufed him, that the different kingdoms of Europe acquired internal vigour ; that they difcerned the refources of which they were poffeffed; that they came both to feel their own ftrength, and to know how to render it formidable to others. It was during his reign, too, that the different kingdoms of Europe, formerly fingle and disjoined, became fo thoroughly acquainted, and fo intimately connected with each other, as to form one great political fystem, in which each took a ftation, wherein it has remained fince that time with lefs variation than could have been expected after the events of two active centuries.

The progreis of the house of Austria. THE progrefs, however, and acquifitions of the houfe of Austria, were not only greater than those of any other power, but more differnible and and confpicuous. I have already enumerated BOOK XII. the vaft territories which descended to Charles from his Auftrian, Burgundian, and Spanish anceftors *. To these he himself added the Imperial dignity; and, as if all this had been too little, the bounds of the habitable globe feemed to be extended, and a new world was fubjected to his command. Upon his refignation, the Burgundian provinces, and the Spanish kingdoms with their dependencies, both in the old and new worlds, devolved to Philip. But Charles transmitted his dominions to his fon, in a condition very different from that in which he had received them. They were augmented by the acceffion of new provinces; they were habituated to obey an administration which was no less vigorous than fleady; they were accuftomed to expensive and perfevering efforts, which, though neceffary in the contefts between civilized nations, had been little known in Europe before the fixteenth century. The provinces of Friefland, Utrecht, and Overyffel, which he acquired by purchase from their former proprietors, and the dutchy of Gueldres, of which he made himfelf mafter, partly by force of arms, partly by the arts of negociation, were additions of great value to his Burgundian dominions. Ferdinand and Ifabella had transmitted to him all

> * Vol. ii. p. 2. Z 2

the

340

BOOK XII. the provinces of Spain, from the bottom of the Pyrenees to the frontiers of Portugal; but as he maintained a perpetual peace with that kingdom, amidst the various efforts of his enterprizing ambition, he made no acquisition of territory in that quarter.

Particularly in Spain.

CHARLEShad gained, however, a vast accession of power in this part of his dominions. By his fuccefs in the war with the commons of Castile, he exalted the regal prerogative upon the ruins of the privileges which formerly belonged to the people. Though he allowed the name of the Cortes to remain, and the formality of holding it to be continued, he reduced its authority and jurifdiction to nothing, and modelled it in fuch a manner, that it became rather a junto of the fervants of the crown, than an affembly of the reprefentatives of the people. One member of the conftitution being thus lopped off, it was impoffible but that the other must feel the stroke, and fuffer by it. The fuppreffion of the popular power rendered the ariftocratical lefs formidable. The grandees, prompted by the warlike spirit of the age, or allured by the honours which they enjoyed in a court, exhausted their fortunes in military fervice, or in attending on the perfon of their Prince. They did not dread, perhaps did not observe, the dangerous progress of the royal authority, thority, which leaving them the vain diffinction of being covered in prefence of their fovereign, ftripped them, by degrees, of that real power which they poffeffed while they formed one body, and acted in concert with the people. Charles's fuccess in abolishing the privileges of the commons, and in breaking the power of the nobles of Caftile, encouraged Philip to invade the liberties of Arragon, which were still more extensive. The Castilians, accustomed to subjection themfelves, affifted in impofing the yoke on their more happy and independent neighbours. The will of the fovereign became the fupreme law in all the kingdoms of Spain; and princes who were not checked in forming their plans by the jealousy of the people, nor controled in executing them by the power of the nobles, could both aim at great objects, and call forth the whole ftrength of the monarchy in order to attain them.

As Charles, by extending the regal prerogative, rendered the monarchs of Spain mafters at home, he added new dignity and power to their crown by his foreign acquifitions. He fecured to Spain the quiet pofferfion of the kingdom of Naples, which Ferdinand had ufurped by fraud, and held with difficulty. He united the dutchy of Milan, one of the moft fertile and populous  $Z_3$  Italian Alfo in other part of Europe.

BOOK XII.

34I

342

BOOK XII. Italian provinces to the Spanish crown; and left his fucceffors, even without taking their. other territories into the account, the most confiderable Princes in Italy, which had been long the theatre of contention to the great powers of Europe, and in which they had ftruggled with emulation to obtain the fuperiority. When the French, in conformity to the treaty of Cateau-Cambrefis, withdrew their forces out of Italy, and finally relinquished all their schemes of conquest on that fide of the Alps, the Spanish dominions then rofe in importance, and enabled their Kings, as long as the monarchy retained any degree of vigour, to preferve the chief fway in all the transactions of that country. But whatever acceffion either of interior authority or of foreign dominion Charles gained for the monarchs of Spain in Europe, it was inconfiderable when compared with his acquifitions in the new world. He added, there, not provinces, but empires to his crown. He conquered territories of fuch immense extent; he discovered fuch inexhaustible veins of wealth, and opened fuch boundless prospects of every kind, as must have roufed his fucceffor, and have called him forth to action, though his ambition had been much lefs ardent than Philip's, and must have rendered him not only enterprizing but formidable.

WHILE

WHILE the elder branch of the Auftrian family role to fuch pre-eminence in Spain, the younger, of which Ferdinand was the head, grew to be confiderable in Germany. The ancient hereditary dominions of the house of Austria in Germany, united to the kingdoms of Hungary and Bohemia, which Ferdinand had acquired by marriage, formed a respectable power; and when the Imperial dignity was added to thefe, Ferdinand poffeffed territories more extensive than had belonged to any Prince, Charles V. excepted, who had been at the head of the Empire during feveral ages. Fortunately for Europe, the difguft which Philip conceived on account of Ferdinand's refusing to relinquish the Imperial crown in his favour, not only prevented for fome time the feparate members of the house of Austria from acting in concert, but occafioned a vifible alienation and rivalship. By degrees, however, regard to the intereft of their family extinguished this impolitical animolity. The confidence which was natural returned; the aggrandizing of the houle of Auftria became the common object of all their fchemes; they gave and received affiftance alternately towards the execution of them; and each, derived confideration and importance from the other's fuccefs. A family fo great and fo afpiring, became the general object of jealoufy and terror. All of Auftria.

BOOK XII. mand. Prog els of the German branch of the houfe

343

Z 4

344

All the power, as well as policy, of Europe were BOOK XII. exerted during a century, in order to check and humble it. Nothing can give a more ftriking idea of the afcendant which it had acquired, and of the terror which it had infpired, than that after its vigour was spent with extraordinary exertions of its ftrength, after Spain was become only the shadow of a great name, and its monarchs were funk into debility and dotage, the house of Austria still continued to be formidable. The nations of Europe had fo often felt its fuperior power, and had been fo conftantly employed in guarding against it, that the dread of it became a kind of political habit, the influence of which remained when the caufes, which had formed it, ceafed to exist.

Acquifitions of the Kings of France during the reign of Charles V.

WHILE the house of Austria went on with fuch fuccefs in enlarging its dominions, France made no confiderable acquisition of new territory. All its schemes of conquest in Italy had proved abortive; it had hitherto obtained no establishment of consequence in the new world; and after the continued and vigorous efforts of four fucceffive reigns, the confines of the kingdom were much the fame as Louis XI. had left them. But though France made not fuch large ftrides towards dominion as the house of Austria, it continued to advance by fteps which were more more fecure, becaufe they were gradual and lefs observed. The conquest of Calais put it out of the power of the English to invade France but at their utmost peril, and delivered the French from the dread of their ancient enemies, who, previous to that event, could at any time penetrate into the kingdom by that avenue, and thereby retard or defeat the execution of their best concerted enterprizes against any foreign power. The important acquisition of Metz, covered that part of their frontier which formerly was most feeble, and lay most exposed to infult. France, from the time of its obtaining these additional securities against external invafion, must be deemed the most powerful kingdom in Europe, and is more fortunately fituated than any on the Continent either for conqueft or defence. From the confines of Artois to the bottom of the Pyrenees, and from the British channel to the frontiers of Savoy and the coast of the Mediterranean, its territories lay compact and unmingled with those of any other power. Several of the confiderable provinces, which had contracted a spirit of independence by their having been long fubject to the great vaffals of the crown, who were often at variance or at war with their mafter, were now accuftomed to recognize and to obey one fovereign. As they became members of the fame

345 Всок XII.

.346

BOOK XII. fame monarchy, they alfumed the fentiments of that body into which they were incorporated, and co-operated with zeal towards promoting its interest and honour. The power and influence wrested from the nobles were seized by the crown. The people were not admitted to fhare in these fpoils; they gained no new privilege; they acquired no additional weight in the legiflature. It was not for the fake of the people. but in order to extend their own prerogative, that the monarchs of France had laboured to humble their great vaffals. Satisfied with having brought them under entire fubjection to the crown, they discovered no folicitude to free the people from their ancient dependence on the nobles of whom they held.

Enables them to afsume an higher ftation among the powers of Europe.

A MONARCH, at the head of a kingdom thus united at home and fecure from abroad, was entitled to form great defigns, becaufe he felt himself in a condition to execute them. The foreign wars which had continued with little interruption from the acceffion of Charles VIII. had not only cherished and augmented the martial genius of the nation, but by inuring the troops during the course of long fervice to the fatigues of war, and accustoming them to obedience, had added the force of discipline to their natural ardour. A gallant and active body  $\mathbf{of}$ of nobles, who confidered themfelves as idle and Book XII. ufelefs, unlefs when they were in the field; who were hardly acquainted with any pastime or exercife but what was military; and who knew no road to power, or fame, or wealth, but war, would not have fuffered their fovereign to remain long in inaction. The people, little acquainted with the arts of peace, and always ready to take arms at the command of their fuperiors, were accustomed by the vast expence of long wars, carried on in diftant countries, to bear impofitions, which, however inconfiderable they may feem if effimated by the exorbitant rate of modern exactions, appear immenfe when compared with the fums levied in France, or in any other country of Europe, previous to the reign of Louis XI. As all the members of which the ftate was composed were thus impatient for action, and capable of great efforts, the fchemes and operations of France must have been no lefs formidable to Europe than those of Spain. The fuperior advantages of its fituation, the contiguity and compactness of its territories, together with the peculiar ftate of its political conftitution at that juncture, must have rendered its enterprizes still more alarming and more decifive. The King poffeffed fuch a degree of power as gave him the entire command of his subjects; the people were

4

347 Book XII

BOOK XII.

348

were ftrangers to those occupations and habits of life which render men averse to war, or unfit for it; and the nobles, though reduced to the fubordination neceffary in a regular government, ftill retained the high undaunted spirit which was the effect of their ancient independence. The vigour of the Feudal times remained, their anarchy was at an end; and the Kings of France could avail themselves of the martial ardour which that fingular inftitution had kindled or kept alive, without being exposed to any of the dangers or inconveniencies which are infeparable from it when in entire force.

Circumftances which prevented the immediate effects of their power. A KINGDOM in fuch a ftate is, perhaps, capable of greater military efforts than at any other period in its progrefs. But how formidable foever or fatal to the other nations of Europe the power of fuch a monarchy might have been, the civil wars which broke out in France faved them at that juncture from feeling its effects. Thefe wars, of which religion was the pretext and ambition the caufe, wherein great abilities were difplayed by the leaders of the different factions, and little conduct or firmnefs were manifefted by the crown under a fucceffion of weak Princes, kept France occupied and embroiled for half a century. During thefe commotions motions the internal ftrength of the kingdom Book XII. was much wasted, and fuch a fpirit of anarchy was' fpread among the nobles, to whom rebellion was familiar, and the reftraint of laws unknown, that a confiderable interval became requifite not only for recruiting the internal vigour of the nation, but for re-eftablishing the authority of the Prince; fo that it was long before France could turn her whole attention towards foreign transactions, or act with her proper force in foreign wars. It was long before fhe rofe to that afcendant in Europe which the has maintained fince the administration of Cardinal Richlieu, and which the fituation as well as extent of the kingdom, the nature of her government, together with the character of her people, entitle her to maintain.

WHILE the kingdoms on the continent grew into power and confequence, England likewife made confiderable progrefs towards regular government and interior ftrength. Henry VIII. probably without intention, and certainly without any confiftent plan, of which his nature was incapable, purfued the fcheme of depreffing the nobility, which the policy of his father Henry VII. had begun. The pride and caprice of his temper led him to employ chiefly new men in the administration of affairs, because he found

349 Book XII.

Progress of England with respect to its interior flate,

350

BOOK XII. found them most obsequious, or least fcrupulous; and he not only conferred on them fuch plenitude of power, but exalted them to fuch pre-eminence in dignity, as mortified and degraded the ancient nobility. By the alienation or fale of the church lands, which were diffipated with a profusion not inferior to the rapacioufnefs with which they had been feized, as well as by the privilege granted to the ancient landholders of felling their eftates, or difpoling of them by will, an immense property, formerly locked up, was brought into circulation. This put the fpirit of industry and commerce in motion, and gave it fome confiderable degree of vigour. The road to power and to opulence became open to perfons of every condition. A fudden and exceffive flow of wealth from the West-Indies proved fatal to industry in Spain ; a moderate acceffion in England to the fum in circulation gave life to commerce, awakened the ingenuity of the nation, and excited it to ufeful enterprize. In France, what the nobles loft, the crown gained. In England, the commons were gainers as well as the King. Power and influence accompanied of course the property which they acquired. They role to confideration among their fellow-fubjects; they began to feel their own importance; and extending their influence in the legislative body gradually, gradually, and often when neither they them- BOOK XII. felves nor others forefaw all the effect of their claims and pretenfions, they at last attained that high authority, to which the British conflictution is indebted for the existence, and must owe the prefervation of its liberty. At the fame time that the English constitution advanced towards perfection, feveral circumftances brought on a change in the ancient fyftem with respect to foreign powers, and introduced another more beneficial to the nation. As foon as Henry disclaimed the supremacy of the Papal See, and broke off all connexion with the Papal court. confiderable fums were faved to the nation, of which it had been annually drained, by remittances to Rome for difpenfations and indulgences, by the expence of pilgrimages into foreign countries *, or by payment of annates. first fruits, and a thousand other taxes which that artful and rapacious court levied on the credulity of mankind. The exercise of a jurifdiction different from the civil power, and

* The lefs which the nation fullained by most of these articles is obvious, and must have been great. Even that by pilgrimages was not inconfiderable. In the year 1428, licence was obtained by no fewer than 916 perfons to visit the fhrine of St. James of Compostella in Spain. Rymer, vol. x. p. In 1434, the number of pilgrims to the fame place was 2460. Ibid. p. In 1445, they were 2100, vol. xi. p.

35 I Воок XII.

claiming

352 Воок XII.

claiming not only to be independent but fuperior to it, a wild folecifm in government, apt not only to perplex and difquiet weak minds, but tending directly to difturb fociety, was finally abolifhed. Government became more fimple as well as more refpectable, when no rank or character exempted any perfon from being amenable to the fame courts, from being tried by the fame judges, and from being acquitted or condemned by the fame laws.

With refpect to the offairs of the continent.

By the lofs of Calais the English were excluded from the continent. All fchemes for invading France became of course as chimerical as they had formerly been pernicious. The views of the English were confined, first by neceffity, and afterwards from choice, within their own island. That rage for conquest which had poffeffed the nation during many centuries, and wasted its ftrength in perpetual and fruitlefs wars, ceafed at length. Those active spirits which had known and followed no profession but war, fought for occupation in the arts of peace, and their country benefited as much by the one as it had fuffered by the other. The nation, exhausted by frequent expeditions to the continent, recruited, and acquired new ftrength; and when roufed by any extraordinary exigency to take part in foreign operations.

tions, the vigour of its efforts were proportionally great, becaufe they were only occafional and of a fhort continuance.

THE fame principle which had led England with reto adopt this new fystem with regard to the powers on the continent, occasioned a change in its plan of conduct with respect to Scotland, the only foreign flate, with which, on account of its fituation in the fame island; the English had fuch a close connexion as demanded their perpetual attention. Inftead of profecuting the ancient scheme of conquering that kingdom, which the nature of the country, defended by a brave and hardy people, rendered dangerous if not impracticable; it appeared more eligible to endeavour at obtaining fuch influence in Scotland as might exempt England from any danger or difquiet from that quarter. The national poverty of the Scots, together with the violence and animofity of their factions, rendered the execution of this plan eafy to a people far fuperior to them in wealth. Their popular leaders were gained; the ministers and favourites of the crown were corrupted'; and fuch absolute direction of their councils acquired, as rendered the operations of the one kingdom dependent in a great measure on the fovereign of the other. Such perfect external fecurity added to

Vol. IV.

Aa

353 Boox XII.

fpect to Scotland.

354 Book XII.

to the interior advantages which England now poffeffed, must foon have raifed it to new confideration and importance; the long reign of Elizabeth, equally confpicuous for wisdom, for fteadines, and for vigour, accelerated its progress, and carried it with greater rapidity towards that elevated station which it hath since held among the powers of Europe.

Changes in the political flate of the fecondary powers in Europe. DURING the period in which the political flate of the great kingdoms underwent fuch changes, revolutions of confiderable importance happened in that of the fecondary or inferior powers. Those in the papal court are most obvious, and of most extensive confequence.

The moft confiderable revolution of the fixteenth century in the court of Rome. IN the Preliminary Book, I have mentioned the rife of that fpiritual jurifdiction which the Popes claim as Vicars of Jefus Chrift, and have traced the progrefs of that authority which they poffefs as temporal Princes*. There was nothing previous to the reign of Charles V. that tended to circumfcribe or to moderate their authority, but fcience and philofophy, which began to revive and to be cultivated. The progrefs of thefe, however, was ftill inconfiderable; they always operate flowly; and it is long before their influence reaches the people, or can produce any fenfible effect upon them. Book XII. They may perhaps gradually, and in a long courfe of years, undermine and shake an established system of false religion, but there is no instance of their having overturned one. The battery is too feeble to demolifh those fabricks which superstition raises on deep foundations, and can ftrengthen with the most confummate art.

* Vol. i. p. 149, &c.

LUTHER had attacked the Papal fupremacy with other weapons, and with an impetuofity more formidable. The time and manner of his attack concurred with a multitude of circumftances, which have been explained, in giving him immediate fuccefs. The charm which had bound mankind for fo many ages was broken at once. The human mind, which had continued long as tame and paffive, as if it had been formed to believe whatever was taught, and to bear whatever was imposed, roufed of a fudden, and became inquifitive, mutinous, and difdainful of the yoke to which it had hitherto fubmitted. That wonderful ferment and agitation of mind, which, at this diftance of time, appears unaccountable, or is condemned as extravagant, was fo general, that it must have been excited by caufes which were natural and of powerful efficacy. The kingdoms of Denmark,

The general revolt againft the doctrines of the church of Rome. and the power of the Popes,

Aa 2

355

356 BOOK XII.

mark, Sweden, England and Scotland, and almost one half of Germany, threw off their allegiance to the Pope, abolished his jurisdiction within their territories, and gave the fanction of law to modes of discipline and fystems of doctrine which were not only independent of his power, but hoftile to it. Nor was this fpirit of innovation confined to those countries which openly revolted from the Pope; it fpread through all Europe, and broke out in every part of it with various degrees of violence. It penetrated early into France, and made progrefs apace. In that kingdom, the number of converts to the opinions of the Reformers was fo great, their zeal fo enterprizing, and the abilities of their leaders fo diftinguished, that they foon ventured to contend for fuperiority with the established church, and were fometimes on the point of obtaining it. In all the provinces of Germany which continued to acknowledge the Papal fupremacy, as well as in the Low-Countries, the Protestant doctrines were fecretly taught, and had gained fo many profelytes, that they were ripe for revolt, and were reftrained merely by the dread of their rulers from imitating the example of their neighbours, and afferting their independence. Even in Spain and in Italy, fymptoms of the fame disposition to shake off the yoke appeared. The pretenfions fions of the Pope to infallible knowledge and fupreme power were treated by many perfons of eminent learning and abilities with fuch fcorn, or impugned with fuch vehemence, that the most vigilant attention of the civil magistrate, the highest strains of pontifical authority, and all the rigour of inquifitorial jurifdiction were requifite to check and extinguish it.

THE defection of fo many opulent and power- This abridgful kingdoms from the Papal See, was a fatal blow to its grandeur and power. It abridged the dominions of the Popes in extent, it diminished their revenues, and left them fewer rewards to beftow on the ecclefiafticks of various denominations, attached to them by vows of obedience as well as by ties of interest, and whom they employed as inftruments to eftablish or support their usurpations in every part of Europe. The countries too which now difclaimed their authority, were those which formerly had been most devoted to it. The empire of fuperstition differs from every other species of dominion; its power is often greatest, and most implicitly obeyed in the provinces most remote from the feat of government; while fuch as are fituated nearer to that, are more apt to difcern the artifices by which it is upheld, or the impostures on which it is founded. The perfonal frailties or vices of the Popes, the errors ed the extent of the Pope's dominions.

357 BOOK XII.

358 Воок XII

BOOK XII. errors as well as corruption of their administration, the ambition, venality, and deceit which reigned in their courts, fell immediately under the observation of the Italians, and could not fail of diminishing that respect which begets fubmiffion. But in Germany, England, and the more remote countries, these were either altogether unknown, or being only known by report, made a flighter impression. Their veneration for the Papal dignity increased with their distance from Rome; and that, added to their gross ignorance, rendered them equally credulous and In tracing the progrefs of the Papal paffive. domination, the boldeft and most fuccessful inftances of encroachment are to be found in Germany and other countries diftant from Italy. In these its impositions were heaviest, and its exactions the most rapacious; fo that in effimating the diminution of power which the court of Rome fuffered in confequence of the Reformation, not only the number but the character of the people who revolted, not only the great extent of territory, but the extraordinary obfeaujoufnefs of the fubjects which it loft, must be taken into the account.

and obliged them to change the fpirit of their gowernment. Nor was it only by this defection of fo many kingdoms and flates which the Reformation occafioned, that it contributed to diminish the power of the Roman Pontiffs. It obliged them to adopt a different fystem of conduct towards the Book XII. nations which still continued to recognife their jurifdiction, and to govern them by new maxims and with a milder spirit. The Reformation taught them, by a fatal example, what they feem not before to have apprehended, that the credulity and patience of mankind might be overburdened and exhausted. They became afraid of venturing upon any fuch exertion of their authority as might alarm or exafperate their subjects, and excite them to a new revolt. They faw a rival church eftablished in many countries of Europe, the members of which were on the watch to observe any errors in their administration, and eager to expose them. They were fenfible that the opinions adverse to their power and usurpations were not confined to their enemies alone, but had fpread even among the people who still adhered to them. Upon all thefe accounts, it was no longer poffible to lead or to govern their flock in the fame manner as in those dark and quiet ages, when faith was implicit, when fubmiffion was unreferved, and all tamely followed and obeyed the voice of their shepherd. From the æra of the Reformation, the Popes have ruled rather by addrefs and management than by authority. The ftyle of their decrees is the fame, but the effect of them is very different. Those Bulls and Interdicts which, before the Reformation, made the 359

to

Aa4

Book XII.

360

the greatest Princes tremble, have fince that period been difregarded or defpifed by the moft inconfiderable. Those bold decisions and acts of jurifdiction which, during many ages, not only paffed uncenfured, but were revered as the awards of a facred tribunal, would, fince Luther's appearance, be treated by one part of Europe as the effect of folly or arrogance, and be detefted by the other as impious and unjuft. The Popes, in their administration, have been obliged not only to accommodate themfelves to the notions of their adherents, but to pay fome regard to the prejudices of their enemies. They feldom venture to claim new powers, or even to infift obstinately on their ancient prerogatives, left they fhould irritate the former; they carefully avoid every measure that may either excite the indignation or draw on them the derifion of the latter. The policy of the court of Rome has become as cautious, circumfpect; and timid, as it was once adventurous and violent; and though their pretensions to infallibility, on which all their authority is founded, does not allow them to renounce any jurifdiction which they have at any time claimed or exercifed, they find it expedient to fuffer many of . their prerogatives to lie dormant, and not to expose themselves to the r, sque of losing that remainder of power which they ftill enjoy by illtimed timed attempts towards reviving obfolete pretenfions. Before the fixteenth century, the Popes were the movers and directors in every confiderable enterprize; they were at the head of every great alliance; and being confidered as arbiters in the affairs of Chriftendom, the court of Rome was the center of political negociation and intrigue. From that time, the greateft operations in Europe have been carried on independent of them; they have funk almoft to a level with the other petty Princes of Italy; they continue to claim, though they dare not exercife, the fame fpiritual jurifdiction, but hardly retain any fhadow of the temporal power which they anciently poffeffed.

But how fatal foever the Reformation may have been to the power of the Popes, it contributed to improve the church of Rome both in fcience and in morals. The defire of equalling the reformers in those talents which had procured them respect; the necessfity of acquiring the knowledge requisite for defending their own tenets, or resulting the arguments of their opponents, together with the emulation natural between two rival churches, engaged the Roman Catholick clergy to apply themselves to the study of useful fcience, which they cultivated with spectrum functions for the state of the state of the state dually 361

The Reformation contributed to improve the church both in fcience and morals.

BOOK XII.

362

dually become as eminent in literature, as they were in fome periods infamous for ignorance. The fame principle occasioned a change no lefs ' confiderable in the morals of the Romish clergy. Various caufes which have formerly been enumerated, had concurred in introducing great irregularity, and even diffolution of mannersamong the popifh clergy. Luther and his adherents began their attack on the church with fuch vehement invectives against these, that, in order to remove the fcandal, and filence their declamations, greater decency of conduct became neceffary. The Reformers themfelves were fo eminent not only for the purity but even austerity of their manners, and had acquired fuch reputation among the people on that account, that the Roman Catholick Clergy must have foon lost all credit, if they had not endeavoured to conform in fome measure to their standard. They knew that all their actions fell under the fevere inspection of the Protestants, whom enmity and emulation prompted to obferve every vice, or even impropriety in their conduct; to cenfure them without indulgence, and to expose them without mercy. This rendered them, of course, not only cautious to avoid fuch enormities as might give offence, but ftudious to acquire the virtues which might merit praise. In Spain and Portugal, where the tyrannical tyrannical jurifdiction of the Inquisition crushed Book XII. the Protestant faith as foon as it appeared, the fpirit of Popery continues invariable; fcience has made fmall progrefs, and the character of ecclesiafticks has undergone little change. But in those countries where the members of the two churches have mingled freely with each other, or have carried on any confiderable intercourfe, either commercial or literary, an extraordinary alteration in the ideas as well as in the morals of the Popifh ecclefiafticks, is manifest. In France, the manners of the Dignitaries and fecular clergy have become decent and exemplary in an high degree. Many of them have been diftinguished for all the accomplishments and virtues which can adorn their profeffion; and differ greatly from their predeceffors before the Reformation, both in their maxims and in their conduct.

NOR has the influence of the Reformation been felt only by the inferior members of the Roman Catholick Church; it has extended to the See of Rome, to the fovereign Pontiffs themfelves. Violations of decorum, and even trefpaffes against morality, which passed without censure in those ages, when neither the power of the Popes, nor the veneration of the people for their character, had any bounds; when there

The effects of it extend to the character of the Popes themfelves.

363 Воок XII.

BOOK XII.

364

there was no hoftile eye to obferve the errors in their conduct, and no adversaries zealous to inveigh against them; would be liable now to the feverest animadversion, and excite general indignation or horror. Inftead of rivalling the courts of temporal Princes in gaiety, and furpaffing them in licentiousnefs, the Popes have ftudied to affume manners more fevere and more fuitable to their ecclefiaffical character. The chair of St. Peter hath not been polluted, during two centuries, by any Pontiff that refembled Alexander VI. or feveral of his predeceffors, who were a difgrace to religion and to human nature. Throughout this long fucceffion of Popes, a wonderful decorum of conduct, compared with that of preceding ages, is obfervable. Many of them have been confpicuous for the virtues becoming their high flation; and by their humanity, their love of literature, and their moderation, have made fome atonement to mankind for the crimes of their predeceffors. A Thus the beneficial influences of the Reformation have been more extensive than they appear on a superficial view; and this great division in the Chriftian church hath contributed, in fome measure, to increase purity of manners, to diffuse fcience, and to infpire humanity. History recites fuch a number of fhocking events, occafioned by religious diffensions, that it must afford afford peculiar fatisfaction to trace any one falutary or beneficial effect to that fource, from which fo many fatal calamities have flowed.  $\times$

THE republick of Venice which, at the beginning of the fixteenth century, had appeared fo formidable, that almost all the potentates of Europe united in a confederacy for its deftruction, declined gradually from its ancient power and fplendor. The Venetians not only loft a great part of their territory in the war excited by the league of Cambray, but the revenues as well as vigour of the flate were exhaufted by their extraordinary and long continued efforts in their own defence; and that commerce by which they had acquired their wealth and power began to decay, without any hopes of its reviving. All the fatal confequences to their republick, which the fagacity of the Venetian fenate forefaw on the first discovery of a passage to the East-Indies by the Cape of Good Hope, took place. Their endeavours to prevent the Portuguese from establishing themselves in the East-Indies, not only by exciting the Soldans of Egypt and the Ottoman monarchs to turn their arms against fuch dangerous intruders, but by affording fecret aid to the Infidels in order to infure their fuccess<sup>2</sup>, proved ineffectual.

<sup>2</sup> Freher. Script. Rer. German. vol. ii. 529.

State of the republick of Venice.

365 Воок XII.

The

366

BOOK XII. The activity and valour of the Portuguefe furmounted every obstacle, and obtained fuch firm footing in that fertile country, as fecured to them large poffeffions, together with influence ftill more extensive. Lisbon, instead of Venice, became the staple for the precious commodities of the Eaft. The Venetians, after having poffeffed for many years the monopoly of that beneficial commerce, had the mortification to be excluded from almost any share in it. The discoveries of the Spaniards in the western world, proved no less fatal to inferior branches of their commerce. The original defects which were formerly pointed out in the conftitution of the Venetian republick continued, and the difadvantages with which it undertook any great enterprize, increased rather than diminished. The fources from which it derived its extraordinary riches and power being dried up, the interior vigour of the ftate declined, and of courfe, its external operations became lefs formidable. Long before the middle of the fixteenth century, Venice ceafed to be one of the principal powers in Europe, and dwindled into a fecondary and fubaltern flate. But as the fenate had the address to conceal its diminution of power, under the veil of moderation and caution; as it made no rash effort that could discover its impotence; as the fymptoms of political decay in in states are not foon observed, and are seldom Book XII. fo apparent to their neighbours as to occasion any fudden alteration in their conduct towards them, Venice continued long to be confidered and respected. She was treated not according to her prefent condition, but according to the rank which fhe had formerly held. Charles V. as well as the monarchs of France his rivals. courted her affiftance with emulation and folicitude in all their enterprizes. Even down to the close of the century, Venice remained not only an object of attention, but a confiderable feat of political negociation and intrigue.

<sup>7</sup>

THAT authority which the first Cofino di Of Tufcany. Medici, and Lawrence, his grandfon, had acquired in the republick of Florence by their beneficence and abilities, inspired their descendants with the ambition of usurping the fovereignty in their country, and paved their way towards it. Charles placed Alexander di Medici at the head of the republick, and to the A.D. 1559 natural interest and power of the family added the weight as well as credit of the Imperial protection. Of these, his fuccessor Colmo, firnamed the Great, availed himfelf; and eftablifhing his fupreme authority on the ruins of the ancient republican conflitution, he tranfmitted that, together with the title of Grand Duke

367 .

363 Воок XII.

Duke of Tuscany, to his descendants. Their dominions were composed of the territories which had belonged to the three commonwealths of Florence, Pisa, and Siena, and formed one of the most respectable of the Italian states.

Of the dukes of Savoy.

THE dukes of Savoy, during the former part of the fixteenth century, poffeffed territories which were not confiderable either for extent or value; and the French, having feized the greater part of them, obliged the reigning Duke to retire for fafety to the ftrong fortrefs of Nice, where he fhut himfelf up for feveral years; while his fon, the Prince of Piedmont, endeavoured to better his fortune, by ferving as an adventurer in the armies of Spain. The peace of Cateau Cambrelis reftored to him his paternal dominions. As thefe are environed on every hand by powerful neighbours, all whole motions the dukes of Savoy must observe with the greatest attention, in order not only to guard against the danger of being furprised and overpowered, but that they may chufe their fidewith difcernment in those quarrels wherein it is impoffible for them to avoid taking part, this peculiarity in their fituation feems to have had no inconfiderable influence on their character. By roufing them to perpetual attention, by keeping their ingenuity always on the ftretch, and and engaging them in almost continual action, BOOK XII. it hath formed a race of Princes more fagacious in difcovering their true interest, more decifive in their refolutions, and more dexterous in availing themfelves of every occurrence which prefented itfelf, than any perhaps that can be fingled out in the hiftory of mankind. By gradual acquifitions the Dukes of Savoy have added to their territories as well as to their own importance; and afpiring at length to regal dignity, which they obtained about half a century ago, they hold no inconfiderable rank among the monarchs of Europe.

THE territories which now form the republick of the of the United Netherlands, were loft during the Provinces, first part of the fixteenth century, among the numerous provinces subject to the house of Austria; and were then so inconfiderable, that hardly one opportunity of mentioning them hath occurred in all the bufy period of this hiftory. But foon after the peace of Cateau Cambrefis, the violent and bigotted maxims of Philip's government, carried into execution with unrelenting rigour by the duke of Alva, exasperated the free people of the Low-countries to fuch a degree, that they threw off the Spanish yoke, and afferted their ancient liberties and laws. Thefe they defended with a perfevering valour, VOL. IV. B b which which occupied the arms of Spain during half a century, exhausted the vigour, ruined the reputation of that monarchy, and at last constrained their ancient masters to recognife and to treat with them as a free independent state. This state, founded on liberty, and reared by industry and œconomy, had grown into reputation, even while struggling for its existence. But when peace and security allowed it to enlarge its views, and to extend its commerce, it rose to be one of the most respectable as well as enterprizing powers in Europe.

369

BOOK XII.

370

THE transactions of the kingdoms in the North of Europe, have been feldom attended to in the course of this history.

Of Ruffia.

RUSSIA remained buried in that barbarifm and obfcurity, from which it was called about the beginning of the prefent century, by the creative genius of Peter the Great, who made his country known and formidable to the reft of Europe.

Of Denmark and Sweden. IN Denmark and Sweden, during the reign of Charles V. great revolutions happened in their conftitutions, civil as well as ecclefiaftical. In the former kingdom, a tyrant being degraded from the throne and expelled the country, (a new a new Prince was called by the voice of the BOOK XII. people to affume the reins of government. In the latter, a fierce people, roufed to arms by injuries and oppreffion, shook off the Danish yoke, and conferred the regal dignity on its deliverer Gustavus Ericson, who had all the virtues of a hero and of a patriot. Denmark, exhausted by foreign wars, or weakened by the diffentions between the King and the nobles, became incapable of fuch efforts as were requifite in order to recover the afcendant which it had long poffeffed in the North of Europe. Sweden, as foon as it was freed from the dominion of strangers, began to recruit its strength, and required in a fhort time fuch interior vigour, that it became the first kingdom in the North. Early in the fubfequent century, it role to fuch a high rank among the powers of Europe, that it had the chief merit in forming as well as conducting that powerful league, which protected not only the Protestant religion, but the liberties of Germany against the bigotry and ambition of the house of Austria.

INDEX

37 I

INDEX

TO THE # SECOND, THIRD, and FOURTH VOLUMES.

N. B. The Roman Numerals direct to the Volume, and the Figures to the Page.

A,

ABSOLUTION, the form of that used by Father Tetzel in Germany, II. 117.

Adorni, the faction of, affifts the Imperial general Colonna in the reduction of Genoa, II. 215.

Adrian of Utrecht, made preceptor to Charles V. under William de Croy, lord of Chievres, II. 20. His character, 30. Sent by Charles with power to affume the regency of Caftile on the death of his grandfather, 39. His claim admitted by Cardinal Ximenes, and executed in conjunction, ib. Authorized by Charles to hold the Cortes of Valencia, which refuses to assemble before him, 91. Made viceroy of Castile on the departure of Charles for Germany, 95. His election remonstrated against by the Castilians, ib. Is chosen Pope, 211. Retrospect of his conduct in Spain during the absence of Charles, 227. Sends Ronquillo to reduce the Segovians, who repulse him, ib. Sends Fonseca to befiege the city, who is repulsed by the inhabitants of Medina del Campo, 228. Apologizes for Fonfeca's conduct to the people, 230. Recals Fonfeca, and difinifies Bb3 difmiffes his troops, ib. His authority difclaimed by the Holy Junta, 232. Deprived of power by them, 235. His ill reception on his arrival at Rome on being chofen to the Papacy, 269. Reftores the territories acquired by his predeceffor, 270. Labours to unite the contending powers of Europe, 271. Publifhes a bull for a three years truce among them, 272. Accedes to the league againft the French King, ib. His death, 280. The fentiments and behaviour of the people on that occafion, ib. A retrofpect of his conduct towards the Reformers, 296. His brief to the diet at Nuremburg, ib. Receives a lift of grievances from the diet, 299. His conduct to the Reformers, how effeemed at Rome, 302.

Africa, the Spanish troops fent by Cardinal Ximenes against Barbarossa, defeated there, II. 52.

Aigues Mortes, interview between the Emperor Charles, and Francis, there, III. 163.

- Aix la Chapelle, the Emperor Charles crowned there, II. 111. Ferdinand his brother crowned King of the Romans there, III. 57.
- Alarcon, Don Ferdinand, Francis I. of France, taken prisoner at the battle of Pavia, committed to his custody, 11. 327. Conducts Francis to Spain, 340. Delivers up Francis in pursuance of the treaty of Madrid, 362. Is sent ambassidor to Francis to require the fulfilment of his treaty, 382. Pope Clement VII. taken prisoner by the Imperialist, is committed to his custody, 408.

Albany, John Stuart, duke of, commands the French army fent by Francis I. to invade Naples, II. 320.

Albert, of Brandenburg, grand master of the Teutonic Order, becomes a convert to the doctrines of Luther, II. 375. Obtains of Sigismund King of Poland the investiture of Prussia, erected into a dutchy, 376. Is put under the ban of the Empire, ib. His family fixed in the inheritance of Prussia, ib. Commands a body of troops in behalf of Maurice of Saxony, but endeavours to affert an independency, IV. 89. Defeats and takes the Duke d'Aumale prisoner, and joins the Emperor at Metz, 118.

118. Is condemned by the Imperial Chamber for his demands on the bifhops of Bamberg and Wortfburg, 130. A league formed againft him, 132. Is defeated by Maurice, 133. Is again defeated by Henry of Brunfwick, 135. Is driven out of Germany, and dies in exile, ib. His territories reftored to his collateral heirs, 136.

- Albert, elector of Metz, the publication of indulgences in Germany, committed to him, II. 116.
- Alexander VI. Pope, remarks on the pontificate of, II. 149.
- Alexander di Medici. See MEDICI.
- Algiers, how it was feized by Barbaroffa, III. 98. Is feized by the brother of the fame name, on the death of the former, 100. Is taken under the protection of the Porte, ib. Is governed by Hafcen Aga in the abfence of Barbaroffa, 239. Is befieged by the Emperor Charles V. 243. Charles forced to re-imbark by bad weather, 248.
- Alrafchid, brother of Muley Hascen King of Tunis, folicits the protection of Barbarossa against him, III. 102. His treacherous treatment by Barbarossa, ib.
- Alva, Duke of, adheres to Ferdinand of Aragon, in his difpute with the Archduke Philip concerning the regency of Castile, II. 12. Forces the Dauphin to abandon the fiege of Perpignan, III. 250. Prefides at the court-martial which condemns the Elector of Saxony to death, 443. Detains the Landgrave prifoner by the Emperor's order, 4.56. Commands under the Emperor, the army deftined against France, IV. 116. Is appointed commander in chief in Piedmont, 182. Enters the ecclefiastical territories and feizes the Campagna Romana, 250. Concludes a truce with the Pope, 251. Negociates a peace between Philip and the Pope, with Cardinal Caraffa, 283. Goes to Rome to alk pardon of the Pope for his hoftilities, 284. Is fent to Paris in the name of Philip to espouse the Princess Elizabeth, 334.
- Amerstorf, a nobleman of Holland, affociated by Charles V. with Cardinal Ximenes, in the regency of Castile, II. 49.

Anabaptifis,

Anabaptifls, the origen of that feet deduced, III. 76. Their principal tenets, 77. Their fettlement at Munfler, 79. Character of their principal leaders, ib. They feize the city of Munfler, 80. They eftablifh a new form of government there, ib. Chufe Bocold King, 84. Their licentious practices, 85. A confederacy of the German Princes formed againft them, 87. Are blockaded in Munfter by the bifhop, ib. The city taken, and great flaughter made of them, 89. Their King put to death, 90. Character of the feet fince that period, ib. See Matthias and Bacold.

Angleria, his authority cited in proof of the extortions of the Flemish ministers of Charles V. II. 64.

Anhalt, Prince of, avows the opinions of Martin Luther, II. 295.

Annats to the court of Rome, what, II. 165.

Aragon, how Ferdinand became posselied of that kingdom, II. 2. The cortes of, acknowledges the Archduke Philip's title to the crown, 74. Ancient enmity between this kingdom and Castile, 9. Navarre added to this crown by the arts of Ferdinand, 26. Arrival of Charles V. 65. The cortes not allowed to assert the Aragonians, ib. They refuse reflictution of the Aragonians, ib. They refuse reflictution of the kingdom of Navarre, 67. Don John Lanuza appointed regent, on the departure of Charles for Germany, 95. Who compoles the difturbances there, 265. The moderation of Charles towards the infurgents on his arrival in Spain, 268. See Spain.

Ardres, an interview there between Francis I. and Henry VIII. of England, II. 109.

Afturias, Charles fon of Philip and Joanna, acknowledged Prince of, by the Cortes of Castile, II. 19.

Ang fourg, a diet called there by Charles V. III. 50. His public entry into that city, ib. The confeffion of faith named from this city, drawn up by Melancthon, ib. Refolute behaviour of the Protestant Princes at, 52. Its form of government violently altered, and rendered fubmiffive to the Emperor, 492.

492. The diet reassembled there, IV. 10. The diet takes part with the Emperor against the city of Magdeburg, 20. Is feized by Maurice of Saxony, 73. Another diet at, opened by Ferdinand, 191. Cardinal Morone attends the diet as the Pope's nuncio, 193. Morone departs on the Pope's death, 195. Recess of the diet on the subject of religion, 200. Remarks on this recess, 206. The diet again affembled there, III. 467. Is intimidated by being furrounded with the Emperor's Spanish troops, ib. The Emperor re-eftablishes the Romish worship, in the churches of, ib. The diet, by the Emperor's order, petitions the Pope for the return of the council to Trent, 476. A system of theology laid before the diet by the Emperor, 482. The archbishop of Mentz declares, without authority, the diet's acceptance of it, 283.

- Avila, a convention of the malecontents in Spain held there, II. 232. A confederacy termed the Holy Junta, formed there, ib. Which difclaims the authority of Adrian, 233. The Holy Junta removed to Tordefillas, 234. See Junta.
- Austria, by what means the house of, became so formidable in Germany, II. 411. The extraordinary acquisitions of the house of, in the person of the Emperor Charles V. IV. 339. 343.

B

- Barbaroffa, Horuck, his rife to the kingdom of Algiers and Tunis, II. 52. Defeats the Spanish troops fent against him by Cardinal Ximenes, ib. His parentage, III. 97. Commences pirate with his brother Hayradin, ib. How he acquired possession of Algiers, 98. Infests the coasts of Spain, 99. Is reduced and killed by Comares the Spanish governor of Oran, ib.
- Barbaroffa, Hayradin, brother to the former of the fame name, takes poffeffion of Algiers on his brother's death, III. 100. Puts his dominions under the protection of the Grand Signior, ib. Obtains the command command of the Turkish fleet, ib. His treacherous treatment of Alraschid, brother to the King of Tunis, 102. Seizes Tunis, 104. Extends his depredations by fea, ib. Prepares to result the Emperor's armament against him, 166. Goletta and his fleet taken, 108. Is defeated by Charles, 110. Tunis taken, 111. Makes a descent on Italy, III. 272. Burns Rheggio, ib. Besieges Nice in conjunction with the French, but is forced to retire, 273. Is disfinissed by Francis, 288.

- Barbary, a fummary view of the revolutions of, III. 96. Its division into independent kingdoms, ib. Rife of the piratical States, 97. See Barbaroffa.
- Barcelona, the public entry of the Emperor Charles V. into that city as its count, 111. 39. The treaties of Charles with the Italian States, published there; 43.
- Bayard, chevalier, his character, II. 135. His gallant defence of Mezieres, befieged by the Imperialists, ib. Obliges them to raife the fiege, ib. His noble behaviour at his death, 291. His respectful funeral, 292.
- Balley, M. his erroneous account of the education of Charles V. corrected, II. 30, Note. His account of the difaftrous retreat of the Emperor Charles V. from his invalion of Provence, III. 148.
- Bible, a translation of, undertaken by Martin Luther, and its effects in opening the eyes of the people, II. 294.
- Bicocca, battle of, between Colonna, and Marechal Lautree, II. 213.
- Becold or Beukels, John, a journeyman taylor, becomes a leader of the anabaptifts, at Munfter, III. 79. Succeeds Matthias in the direction of their affairs, 83. His enthuliaftic extravagances, ib. Is chosen King, 84. Marries fourteen wives, 85. Beheads one of them, 88. Is put to a cruel death at the taking of Munfter, 90. See Anabapti/Is.

Bohemia, the archduke Ferdinand chofen King of, II. 410. Ferdinand encroaches on the liberties of the Bohemians, III. 463. The Reformation introduced by John Hufs and Jerome of Prague, 464. Raife an army army to no purpole, ib. Is closely confined in the citadel of Mechlin, IV. 25.

- Bonnivet, admiral of France, appointed to command the invation of Milan, II. 280. His character, ib. Enables Colonna to defend the city of Milan by his imprudent delay, 282. Forced to abandon the Milanefe, 290. Is wounded and his army defeated by the Imperialifts, ib. Stimulates Francis to an invation of the Milanefe, 313. Advifes Francis to befiege Pavia, 316. Advifes him to give battle to Bourbon who advanced to the relief of Pavia, 323. Is killed at the battle of Pavia, 325.
- Bologna, an interview between the Emperor Charles V. and Pope Clement VII. there, III. 39. Another meeting between them there, 64.
- Bouillon, Robert de la Marck, lord of, declares war against the Emperor Charles, at the infligation of Francis II. 194. Is ordered by Francis to difband his troops, 195. His territories reduced by the Emperor, ib.
  - Boulogne, befieged by Henry VIII. of England, III. 296. Taken, 306.
- Bourbon, Charles Duke of, his character, II. 274. The caufes of his discontent with Francis J. 275. His duchess dies, 276. Rejects the advances of Louife the King's mother, ib. His eftate fequeftered by her intrigues, 277. Negociates fecretly with the Emperor, ib. Is included in a treaty between the Emperor and Henry VIII. of England, 278. Is taxed by the King with betraying him, which he denies, 279. Escapes to Italy, 280. Directs the measures of the Imperial army under Lannoy, 289. Defeats the French on the banks of the Seffia, 290. Infligates Charles to an invafion of France, 308. Advances to the relief of Pavia, 321. Defeats Francis, and takes him prisoner, 325. Hastens to Madrid to fecure his own interests in the interview between Charles and Francis, 343. His kind reception by Charles, 352. Obtains a grant of the duchy of Milan, and is made general of the Imperial army, 353. Obliges Sforza to furrender Milan, 386.

386. Is forced to oppress the Milanese to fatisfy his troops mutinying for pay, 292. Sets Moronè at liberty, and makes him his confident, ib. Appoints Leyva governor of Milan, and advances to invade the Pope's territories, 394, 375. His difappointed troops mutiny, ib. He determines to plunder Rome, 400. Arrives at Rome, and affaults it, 401. Is killed, ib.

Brandenburgh, Elector of, avows the opinions of Luther, II. 295.

Albert of. See Albert.

Bruges, a league concluded there between the Emperor and Henry VIII. of England, against France, II. 199.

Brunswick, Duke of, avows the opinions of Luther, II. 295.

Henry, Duke of, driven from his dominions by the Proteftant Princes of the league of Smalkalde, III. 280. Raifes men for Francis, but employs them to recover his own dominions, 322. Is taken prifoner, ib.

Buda, fiege of, by Ferdinand King of the Romans, III. 235. Is treacheroufly feized by Sultan Solyman, 236.

C

Cajetan, Cardinal, the Pope's legate in Germany, appointed to examine the doctrines of Martin Luther, H. 129. Requires Luther peremptorily to retract his errors, ib. Requires the elector of Saxony to furrender or banish Luther, 131. His conduct juftified, 133.

Calais, an ineffectual congress there, between the Emperor and Francis, under the mediation of Henry VIII. II. 197. The careless manner in which it was guarded in the reign of Mary Queen of England, IV. 292. Ineffectual remonstrances of Philip, and Lord Wentworth the governor, concerning its defenceless state, ib. Is invested and taken by the Duke of Guise, 294. The English inhabitants gurned turned out, 496. Stipulations concerning, in the treaty of Chateau Cambrefis, 330.

Cambray, articles of the peace concluded there, between the Emperor Charles, and Francis of France, III. 33. Remarks on this treaty, ib.

- Campe, peace of, between Henry VIII. and Francis, III. 361.
- Campeggio, Cardinal, made legate from Pope Clement VII. to the fecond diet at Nuremberg, II. 303. Publifhes articles for reforming the inferior clergy, 305. Advifes Charles to rigorous measures against the Protestants, III. 53.
- Capitulation of the Germanic body, figned by Charles V. and prefcribed to all his fucceffors, II. 86.
- Caraffa, Cardinal, his precipitate election, IV. 213. Is appointed legate to Bologna, ib. Reafons of his difguft with the Emperor, 214. Perfuades the Pope to folicit an alliance with France againft the Emperor, 215. 219. 222. His infidious commiffion to the court of France, 242. His public entry into Paris, 243. Exhorts Henry to break his truce with the Emperor, 244. Abfolves Henry from his oath, 246. Negociates a peace between the Pope and Philip, with the Duke d'Alva, 283. The fate of him and his brother on the death of Pope Paul, 335.
- Carloftadius, imbibes the opinions of Martin Luther, at Wittemburg, II. 142. His intemperate zeal, 293. Awed by the reproofs of Luther, ib.
- Carignan, befieged by the count d'Enguien, and defended by the marquis de Guasto, III. 288. Guasto defeated in a pitched battle, 291. The town taken, 293.

Castaldo, Marquis of Piadeno. See Piadeno.

Caflile, how Ifabella became poffeffed of that kingdom, II. 2. The Archduke Philip's title acknowledged by the Cortes of that kingdom, 4. Ifabella dies, and leaves her hufband Ferdinand of Aragon, regent, 8. Ferdinand refigns the crown of, ib. Ferdinand acknowledged regent by the Cortes, 9. Enmity between this kingdom and Aragon, ib. The

The particular diflike of the Castilians to Ferdinand ib. The regency of, jointly vested in Ferdinand, Philip, and Joanna, by the treaty of Salamanca, 15. Declares against Ferdinand, 16. The regency of, refigned by Philip to Ferdinand, 17. Philip and Joanna acknowledged King and Queen by the Cortes, 19. Death of Philip, ib. The perplexity of the Castilians on Joanna's incapacity for government, ib. Ferdinand gains the regency and the good will of the Castilians by his prudent administration, 24. Oran and other places in Barbary annexed to this kingdom by Ximenes, 25. Ximenes appointed regent by Ferdinand's will, until the arrival of Charles V. 35. Charles affumes the regal title, 40. Ximenes procures its acknowledgment, 41. The nobility depressed by Ximenes, 43. The grandees mutiny against Ximenes, 45. The mutiny fuppreffed, ib. Ximenes refumes the grants made by Ferdinand to the nobles, 46. The bold reply of Ximenes to the discontented nobles, 48. Other affociates in the regency appointed with Ximenes at the infligation of the Flemish courtiers, 49. Ximenes dies, 61. Charles acknowledged King by the Cortes, on his arrival, with a refervation in favour of his mother Joanna, 62. The Castilians receive unfavourable impreffions of him, 63. Difgufted by his partiality to his Flemish ministers, 64. Sauvage made chancellor, ib. William de Croy, appointed archbishop of Toledo, 65. The principal cities confederate, and complain of their grievances, 68. The clergy of, refuse to levy the tenth of benefices granted by the Pope to Charles V. 89. Interdicted, but the interdict taken off, by Charles's application, An infurrection there, 92. Increase the disafib. fection, 93. Cardinal Adrian appointed regent, on the departure of Charles for Germany, 95. The views and pretenfions of the commons, in their infurrections, 230. The confederacy called the Holy Junta formed, 232. The proceedings of which are carried on in the name of Queen Joanna, 234. Receives circulatory letters from Charles for the infurgents furgents to lay down their arms, with promifes of pardon, 236. The nobles undertake to fupprefs the infurgents, 243. Raife an army against them under the Conde de Haro, 246. Haro gets poffeffion of Joanna, 247. Expedients by which they raife money for their troops, 250. Unwilling to proceed to extremities with the Junta, ib. The army of the Junta routed and Padilla executed, 255, 256. Diffolution of the Junta, 258. The moderation of Charles toward the infurgents on his arrival in Spain, 268. He acquires the love of the Caftilians, ib. See Spain.

Catherine of Aragon, is divorced from Henry VIII. of England, III. 73. Dies, 171.

- Catherine a Boria, a nun, flies from her cloifter, and marries Martin Luther, II. 373.
- Catherine di Medici. See MEDICI.
- Cavi, peace concluded there between Pope Paul IV. and Philip II. of Spain, IV. 283.
- Cercamp, negociations for peace entered into there between Philip II. of Spain, and Henry II. of France, IV. 311. 321. The negociations removed to Chateau Cambrefis, 326. See Chateau Cambrefis.
- Characters of men, rules for forming a proper effimate of them, 111. 338. Applied to the cafe of Luther, ib.
- Charles IV. Emperor of Germany, his observations on the manners of the clergy, in his letter to the archbishop of Metz, II. 152, Note.

Charles V. Emperor, his defcent and birth, II. I. How he came to inherit fuch extensive dominions, ib. Acknowledged Prince of Afturias, by the Cortes of Caffile, 19. His father Philip dies, ib. Jealoufy and hatred of his grandfather Ferdinand toward him, 26. Left heir to his dominions, 29. Death of Ferdinand, ib. His education committed to William de Croy, lord of Chievres, ib. Adrian of Utrecht appointed to be his preceptor, 30. The first opening of his character, 32. Affumes the government of Flanders, and attends to businefs, ib. Sends Cardinal Adrian to be regent of Caftile, who executes executes it jointly with Ximenes, 38. Affumes the regal title, 40. His title admitted with difficulty by the Caftilian nobility, 41. Perfuaded to add affociate regents to Ximenes, 49. His Flemish court corrupted by the avarice of Chievres, 52. Perfuaded by Ximenes to vifit Spain, but how that journey is retarded, 54. The present state of his affairs, ib. Concludes a peace at Noyen with Francis I. of France, and the conditions of the treaty. 55. Artives in Spain, 58. His ungrateful treatment of Ximenes, 60. His public entry into Valladolid, 62. Is acknowledged King by the Cortes, who vote him a free gift, ib. The Castilians receive unfavourable impressions of him, 64. Difgusts them, by his partiality to his Flemish ministers, ib. Sets out for Aragon, ib. Sends his brother Ferdinand to visit their grandfather Maximilian, 65. Cannot affemble the Cortes of Aragon in his own name, 66. The opposition made by that affembly to his defires, ib. Refuses the application of Francis I. for reflitution of the kingdom of Navarre, 67. Neglects the remonstrances of the Castilians, 68. Death of the Emperor Maximilian, 69. View of the prefent state of Europe, ib. How Maximilian was obstructed in fecuring the Empire to him, 70. Francis I. aspires to the Imperial crown, 71. Circumftances favourable to the pretentions of Charles, ib. 72. The Swifs Cantons espouse his cause, 76. Apprehensions and conduct of Pope Leo X. on the occafion, 78. Affembling of the diet at Francfort, 80. Frederick duke of Saxony refuses the offer of the empire and votes for him, 82. And refuse the prefents offered by his ambaffadors, 83. Concurring circumstances which favoured his election, 84. His election, 85. Signs and confirms the capitulation of the Germanic body, 86. The election notified to him, ib. Affumes the title of Majefty, ib. Accepts the Imperial dignity offered by the count Palatine ambaffador from the Electors, 88. The clergy of Castile refuse the tenth of benefices granted him by the Pope, 89. Procures the interdict the kingdom kingdom is laid under for refufal, to be taken off, 89. Empowers Cardinal Adrian to hold the Cortes of Valencia, qt. The nobles refuse to allemble without his presence, ib. Authorises the insurgents there to continue in arms, ib. Summons the Cortes of Caffile to meet in Galicia, 92. Narrowly escapes with his Flemish ministers from an infurrection on that account, 93. Obtains a dortative from the Cortes, 95. Prepares to leave Spain, and appoints regents, ib. Embarks, 96. Mouves of this journey, 97. Rife of the rivalfhip between him and Francis I. 98. Courts the favour of Henry VIII. of England and his minister Cardinal Wolfey, 105. Vifus Henry at Dover, 108. Promifes Wolfey his interest for the papacy, 109. Has a second interview with Henry at Gravelines, 110. Offers to submit his differences with Francis to Henry's arbitration, III. His magnificent coronation at Aix-La-Chapelle, ib. Calls a diet at Worms, to check the reformers, 113. Caules which hindered his espouting the party of Martin Luther, 176. Grants Luther a safe-conduct to the diet of Worms, 177. An edict published against him, 179. His embarrafiment at this time, 184. Concludes an alliance with the Pope, 189. The conditions of the treaty, ib. Death of his minister Chievres, and its advantages to him, 190. Invalion of Navarre by Francis, 192. The French driven out, and their general L'Esparre taken prisoner, 194. War declared against him by Robert de la Marck, lord of Bouillon, who ravages Luxemburg, 194, 195. Reduces Bouillon, and invades France, 1b. His demands at the congress at Calais, 198. Has an interview with Cardinal Wolfey at Bruges, and concludes a league with Henry VIII, against France, 199. Pope Leo declares for him against France, 204. The French driven out of Milan, 208, 213. Vilits England in his paffage to Spain, 217. Cultivates the good-will of Cardinal Wolfey, and creates the Earl of Surrey his high admiral, 218. Grants the island of Malta to the Knights of St. John, expelled from Rhodes by VOL. IV. Solyman Cc

INDEX.

.

Solyman the Magnificent, 222. Arrives in Spain, 223. A retrospect of his proceedings in relation to the infurrections in Spain, 236. Iffues circulatory letters for the infurgents to lay down their arms, with promises of pardon, ib. His prudent moderation toward the infurgents, on his arrival in Spain, 268. Acquires the love of the Castilians, 269. Enters into a league with Charles Duke of Bourbon, Why he did not endeavour to get Wolfey. 278. elected Pope, 284. Invades Guienne and Burgundy but without fuccefs, 287. His troops in Milan mutiny for want of pay, but are pacified by Morone, Undertakes an invalion of Provence, 308. 280. Orders Pescara to beliege Marseilles, 309.' Pescara obliged to retire, 310. Disconcerted by the French over-running the Milanefe again, 315. The revenues of Naples mortgaged to raife money, ib. His troops defeat Francis and take him prifoner at the battle of Pavia, 326. His affected moderation at receiving the news, 328. Avails himfelf of a treaty concluded between Lannoy and Pope Clement, but refuses to ratify it, 335. His army in Pavia mutiny, and are obliged to be difbanded, 336. His deliberations on the proper improvement of his difadvantages, 337. His propositions to Francis, 338. After many delays grants Sforza the inveftiture of Milan, 342. Morone's intrigues betrayed to him by Pefcara, 347. Orders Pefcara to continue his negociations with Morone, 348. His rigorous treatment of Francis, 349. Visits Francis, 351. kind reception of the Duke of Bourbon, 352. Grants Bourbon the dutchy of Milan, and appoints him general in chief of the Imperial army there, 353. Fruitless negociations for the delivery of Francis, 354. Treaty of Madrid, with Francis, 356. Delivers up Francis, 362. Marries Isabella of Portugal, ib. An alliance formed against him at Cognac, 379. Sends ambassadors to Francis to require the fulfilment of the treaty of Madrid, 382. Prepares for war against Francis, 384. The Pope reduced to an accommodation with him, 389. The exhaufted hausted state of his finances, 391. His troops under Bourbon distressed and mutinous for want of pay, ib. Bourbon affaults Rome, and is flain but the city taken, 404. The Prince of Orange general on Bourbon's death, takes the caffle of St Angelo, and the Pope prisoner, 407. The Emperor's conduct on that occasion, 408. His diffensions with the Pope, how far favourable to the reformation, 411. His inftructions to the diet at Spires, ib. His manifesto against the Pope, and letter to the Cardinals, 412. France and England league against him, III. 3. Is refused supplies by the Cortes of Castile, 9. Delivers the Pope for a ranfom, His overtures to Henry and Francis, 12. 10. Their declaration of war against him, 14. Is challenged by Francis to fingle combat, ib. Andrew Doria revolts from Francis to him, 22. His forces defeat the French in Italy, 25. 28. His motives for defiring an accommodation, 29. Concludes a separate treaty with the Pope, 30. Terms of the peace of Cambray concluded with Francis by the mediation of Margaret of Auffria and Louise of France, 32. Remarks on the advantages gained by him in this treaty, and on his conduct of the war, ib. Vifits Italy, 38. His policy on his publick entry into Barcelona, 40. Has an interview with the Pope at Bologna, ib. Motives for his moderation in Italy, ib. His treaties with the ftates of, 41. Is crowned King of Lombardy and Emperor of the Romans, 43. Summons a diet at Spires to confider the flate of religion, 46. His deliberations with the Pope, respecting the expediency of calling a general council, 48. Appoints a diet at Augsburg, 50. Makes a publick entry into that city, ib. His endeavours to check the reformation, ib. Refolute behaviour of the Protestant Princes toward him, 52. His fevere - decree against the Protestants, ib. Proposes his . brother Ferdinand to be elected King of the Romans, 55. Is opposed by the Protestants, 56. Obtains his election, 57. Is defirous of an accommodation with the Protestants, 60. Concludes a treaty with Cc2 them them at Nuremburg, 61. Raifes an army to oppole the Turks under Solyman, and obliges him to retire, 62. Has another interview with the Pope, and preffes him to call a general council, 64. Procures a league of the Italian States to fecure the peace of Italy, 67. Arrives at Barcelona, ib. His endeavours to prevent the negociations and meeting between the Pope and Francis, 71. Undertakes to expel Barbaroffa from Tunis, and reftore Muley Hascen, 105. Lands in Africa, and besieges Goletta, 107. Takes Goletta, and feizes Barbaroffa's fleet, 109, 110. Deseats Barbaroffa, and takes Tunis, 111, 112. Reftores Muley Hafeen, and the treaty between them, 113. The glory acquired by this enterprize, and the delivery of the Chriftian captives, 114. Seizes the dutchy of Milan on the death of Francis Sforza, 130. His policy with regard to it, ib. Prepares for war with Francis, 132. His invective against Francis at Rome before the Pope in council, 133. Remarks on this tranfaction, 136. Invades France, 139. Enters Provence and finds it defolated, 144. Besieges Marfeilles and Arles, 146. His miserable retreat from Provence, 148. His invalion of Picardy defeated, 150. Is accused of poifoning the Dauphin, 152. Improbability of its truth, ib. Conjecture concern-ing the Dauphin's death, ib. Flanders invaded by Francis, 155. A fuspension of arms in Flanders, how negociated, ib. A truce in Piedmont, 156. Motives to these truces, ib. Negociation for peace with Francis, 161. Concludes a truce for ten years at Nice, 162. Remarks on the war, ib. His interview with Francis, 164. Courts the friendship of Henry VIII. of England, 172. Indulges the Proteftant Princes, 173 Quiets their apprehensions of the Catholick league, 178. His troops mutiny, 181. Assembles the Cortes of Castile. 182. De-Aroys the ancient constitution of the Cortes, 184. Inftance of the haughty spirit of the Spanish grandees, 185. Defires permiffion of Francis to pass through France to the Netherlands, 195. His reception in France, France, 196. His rigorous treatment of Ghent, 200. Refuses to fulfil his engagements to Francis, 202. Appoints a friendly conference between a deputation of Catholick and Protestant divines before the diet at Ratifbon, 227. Refuit of this conference, 230. Grants a private exemption from oppreffions to the Protestants, 231. Undertakes to reduce Algiers, 239. Is near being caft away by a violent ftorm, 243. Lands near Algiers, ib. His foldiers exposed to a violent tempest and rain, 245. His fleet shattered, 246. His fortitude under thete difasters, 248, 249. Leaves his enterprize and embarks again, ib. Is diffreffed with another form at fea, ib. Takes advantage of the French invafion of Spain to obtain fubfidies from the Cortes, 261. His treaty with Portugal, ib. Concludes a league with Henry VIII. 263. Particulars of the treaty, 265. Over runs Cleves, and his barbarous treatment of the town of Duren, 269. His behaviour to the Duke of Cleves, 270. Befieges Landrecy, ib. Is joined by an English detachment, ib. Is forced to retire, 271. Courts the favour of the Protestants, 280. His negociations with the Protestants, at the diet at Spires, 281. Procures the concurrence of the diet in a war against Francis, 286. Negociates a separate peace with the King of Denmark, ib. Invades Champagne, and invefts St. Difiere, 294. Want of concert between his operations and those of Henry, who now invades France, 296. Obtains St. Difiere by artifice, 297. His diffreffes and happy movements, 299. Concludes a separate peace with Francis, 301. His motives to this peace, 302. His advantages by this treaty, 305. Obliges himfelf by a private article to exterminate the Protestant herefy, 30b. Is cruelly afflicted with the gout, 309. Diet at Worms, 311. Arrives at Worms and alters his conduct toward the Protestants, 314. His conduct on the death of the Duke of Orleans, 319. His diffimulation to the Landgrave of Heffe, 341. Concludes a truce with Solyman, 346. Holds a diet at Ratifbon, 347. Cc3 His

3

His declaration to the Protestant deputies, 352. His treaty with the Pope, concluded by the Cardinal of Trent, ib. His circular letter to the Protestant members of the Germanick body, 354. The Protestants levy an army against him, 364. Is unprepared against them, 365. Puts them under the ban of the Empire, 367. The Protestants declare war against him, 369. Marches to join the troops fent by the Pope, 372. Farnele, the Pope's legate, returns in difguit, 374. His prudent declenfion of an action with the Protestants, 378. Is joined by his Flemish troops, ib. Proposals of peace made by the Protestants, 391. Their army disperse, 392. His rigorous treatment of the Protestant Princes, 395. Difmiffes part of his army, 398. The Pope recals his troops, 399. His reflection on Fiesco's infurrection at Genoa, 417. Is alarmed at the hoftile preparations of Francis, 423. Death of Francis, 425. A parallel drawn between him and Francis, 426. Confequences of Francis's death to him, 430. Marches against the elector of Saxony, 431. Paffes the Elbe, 434. Defeats the Saxon army, 438. Takes the Elector prisoner, ib. His harsh reception of him, 439. Invefts Wittemberg, 441. Condemns the Elector to death, by a court-martial, 443. The Elector by treaty furrenders the electorate, 446. The harsh terms imposed by him on the Landgrave of Heffe, 450. His haughty reception of the Landgrave, 454. Detains him prisoner, 456. Seizes the warlike flores of the league, 462. His cruel exactions, ib. Affembles a diet at Augfburg, 466. Intimidates the diet by his Spanish troops, ib. Reeftablishes the Romish worship in the churches of Augsburg, 467. Seizes Placentia, 473. Orders the diet to petition the Pope for the return of the council to Trent, 476. Protefts against the council of Bologna, 479. Caufes a system of faith to be prepared for Germany, 480. Lays it before the diet, 482. The Interim opposed, 488. And rejected by the Imperial cities, 490. Reduces the city of Aughburg to submission, 492. Repeats the fame violence violence at Ulm, ib. Carries the Elector and Landgrave with him into the Low Countries, 494. Procures his fon Philip to be recognized by the States of the Netherlands, 496. Establishes the Interim Reaffembles the diet at Augsburg, there, 497. under the influence of his Spanish troops, IV. 10. The city of Magdeburg refuses to admit the Interim; and prepares for refistance, 20. Appoints Maurice Elector of Saxony to reduce it, 21. Promifes to protect the Protestants at the council of Trent, 23. Arbitrarily releafes Maurice and the Elector of Brandenburg, from their engagements to the Landgrave for the recovery of his liberty, 24. Endeavours to fecure the Empire for his fon Philip, 26. His brother Ferdinand refuses to refign his pretenfions, 27. Befieges Parma, but is repulfed, 36. Proceeds rigoroufly against the Protestants, 38. Endeavours to support the council of Trent, 39. Puts Magdeburg under the ban of the Empire, 40. Abfolves the city, 46. Is involved in difputes between the council and the Protestant deputies, concerning their fafe conduct, 49. Begins to fulpect Maurice of Saxony, 66. Circumstances which contributed to deceive him with regard to Maurice, 68. Maurice takes the field against him, 70. Maurice seconded by Henry II. of France, 72. His distress and consternation, 73. An ineffectual negociation with Maurice, 75. Flies from Infpruck, 80. Releases the Elector of Saxony, 82. Is folicited to fatisfy the demands of Maurice, q1. His present difficulties, 93. Refuses any direct compliance with the demands of Maurice, 97. Is disposed to yield by the progress of Maurice's operations, 98. Makes a peace with Maurice at Paffau, 101. Reflections on this treaty, 103. Turns his arms against France, 112. Lays fiege to Metz, 116. Is joined by Albert of Brandenburg, 117. His army distressed by the vigilance of the Duke of Guife, 119. Raifes the fiege and retires in a shattered condition, 122. Cosmo di Medici afferts his independency against him, 124. Siena revolts against Cc4 him.

....

him, 124. Is dejected at his bad fuccels, 128. Takes Terrouane, and demolifies it, 138. Takes Hefden, ib. Proposes his fon Philip as a hufband to Mary Queen of England, 155. The articles of the marriage, 157. Marches to oppose the French operations, 107. Is defeated by Henry, 168. Invades Picardy, 169. Grants Siena, fubdued by Cofmo di Medici, to his fon Philip, 181. A diet at Augfburg opened by Ferdinand, 191. Leaves the interior administration of Germany to Ferdinand, 106. Applies again to Ferdinand to refign his pretentions of fucceffion to Philip, but is refused, 197. Recefs of the diet of Aughurg on the fubject of religion. 200. A treaty concluded between Pope Paul IV. and Henry II. of France against him, 223. Refigns his hereditary dominions to his fon Philip, ib. His motives for retirement, 224. Had long meditated this refignation, 228. The ceremony of this deed, 230. His fpeech on this occasion, 231. Refigns alfo the dominions' of Spain, 235. - His intended retirement into Spain retarded, 236. A truce for five years concluded with France, 239. Endeavours in vain to fecure the Imperial crown for Philip, 254. Refigns the Imperial crown to Ferdinand, 255. Sets out for Spain, 256. His arrival and reception in Spain, 257. Is diftiessed by his fon's ungrateful neglect in paying his penfion, 258. Fixes his retreat in the monaftery of St. Justus in Plazencia, ib. The fituation of this monastery, and his apartments, described, 209. Contrast between the conduct of Charles and the Pope, 2'0. His manner of life in his retreat, 311. His death precipitated by his monastick severities, 315. Celebrates his own funeral, ib. Dies, 316. His character, 317. A review of the flate of Europe during his reign, 337. His acquifitions to the crown of Spain, 341.

Chatcan Cambrefis, the conferences for peace between Philip II. of Spain, and Henry II. of France, 'removed thither from Cercamp, IV. 326. The peace retarded by the demand of Elizabeth of England for reflitution of Calais, '327. Particulars of the treaty R figned there between England and France, 329. Terms of the pacification between Philip and Henry, 332.

Cheregato, nuncio from the Pope to the diet at Nuremburgh, his inftructions, II. 296. Oppofes the affembling a general council, 298.

Chievres, William de Croy, lord of, appointed by Maximilian to fuperintend the education of his grandfon Charles II. 29. Adrian of Utrecht made preceptor under him, 30. His direction of the fludies of Charles, 32. His avarice corrupts the Flemisch court of Charles, 52. Negociates a peace with France, 55. Endeavours to prevent an interview between Charles and Ximenes, 57. Attends Charles to Spain, 58. His afcendency over Charles, 63. His extortions, 64. His death and the fuppofed caufes of it, 190.

Chriftians, primitive, why averfe to the principles of toleration, 1V. 202.

Clement VII. Pope, his election, II. 283. His character, ib. Grants Cardinal Wolfey a legatine commission in England for life, 284. Refuses to accede to the league against Francis, 288. Labours to accommodate the differences between the contending parties, ib. His proceedings with regard to the reformers, 303. Concludes a treaty of neutrality with Francis, 319. Enters into a separate treaty with Charles after the battle of Pavia, and the confequences of it, 335. Joins in an alliance with Francis Sforza, and the Venetians, against the Emperor, 379. Abfolves Francis from his oath to observe the treaty of Madrid, 380. Cardinal Colonna feizes Rome, and invefts him in the caftle of St. Angelo, 389. Is forced to an accommodation with the Imperialists, ib. His revenge against the Colonna family, 394. Invades Naples, ib. His territories invaded by Bourbon, and his perplexity on the occasion, 397. Concludes a treaty with Lannoy viceroy of Naples, 398. His confernation on Bourbon's motions towards Rome, 402. Rome taken, and himfelf befieged in the caffle of St. Angelo, 405. Surrenders himfelf prifoner, 407. The Florentines Florentines revolt against him, III. 4. Pays Charles a ranfom for his liberty, with other flipulations, 10. Makes his escape from confinement. Writes a letter of thanks to Lautrec, ib. Is II. jealous of the intentions of Francis, and negociates with Charles, 19. His motives and steps towards an accommodation, 29. Concludes a separate treaty with Charles, 31. His interview with the Emperor at Bologna, 40. Crowns Charles, King of Lombardy and Emperor of the Romans, 43. His reprefentations to the Emperor against calling a general council, 48. Has another interview with Charles at Bologna, and the difficulties raifed by him to the calling a general council, 64. Agrees to a league of the Italian States for the peace of Italy, 66. His interview and treaty with Francis, 71. Marries Catharine di Medici to the Duke of Orleans, ib. His protraction of the affair of the divorce solicited by Henry VIII. 72. Reverses Cranmer's fentence, of divorce, under penalty of excommunication, 73. Henry renounces his fupremacy, ib. His death, 74. Reflections on his Pontificate, 75.

- Clergy, Romith, remarks on the immoral lives of, and how they contributed to the progrefs of the Reformation, II. 150. The facility with which they obtained pardons, 152. Their ufurpations in Germany, during the difputes concerning inveftitures, 155. Their other opportunities of aggrandizing themfelves there, 156. Their perfonal immunities, 157. Their encroachments on the laity, 158. The dreadful effects of fpiritual centures, 159. Their devices to fecure their ufurpations, 160. The united effect of all thefe circumftances, 165. Oppofe the advancement of learning in Germany, 171. Cleves, invaded and over-run by the Emperor Charles V. III. 269. Cruel treatment of Duren, ib. Humiliating fubmiffion of the Duke, ib.
- Cnipperdoling, a leader of the Anabaptifts at Munffer, an account of, III. 80.83. See Anabaptifts.

Cognac,

- Cognac, an alliance formed there against Charles V: by the Pope, the Venetians, the Duke of Milan, and Francis I. II. 379.
- Coligni, admiral, governor of Picardy, defends St. Quintin against the Spanish general Emmanuel Phillibert Duke of Savoy, IV. 270. His brother D'Andelot defeated in an endeavour to join the garnison, 272. But D'Andelot enters the town, 273. His character, 278. The town taken by affault, and himself taken prisoner, 279.
- Cologne, Ferdinand King of Hungary and Bohemia, brother to the Emperor Charles V. elected King of the Romans by the college of Electors there, III. 57.
  - Herman, Count de Wied, archbishop and elector of, inclines to the Reformation, and is opposed by his canons, who appeal to the Emperor and Pope, III. 316. Is deprived and excommunicated, 344. Refigns, 396.
- Colonna, Cardinal Pompeo, his character, and rivalfhip with Pope Clement VII. II. 388. Seizes Rome, and invefts the Pope in the caffle of St. Angelo, 389. Is degraded, and the reft of the family excommunicated by the Pope, 394. Is prevailed on by the Pope when prifoner with the Imperialifts to folicit his delivery, III. 10.

Profper, the Italian general, his char2cter, II. 204. Appointed to command the troops in the invalion of Milan, ib. Drives the French out of Milan, 208. His army how weakened at the death of Pope Leo X. 209. Defeats Marechal de Lautrec, at Bicocca, 213. Reduces Genoa, 216. The bad state of his troops when the French invade Milan, 281. Is enabled to defend the city by the ill-conduct of Bonnevit the French commander, 282. Dies, and is fucceeded by Lannoy, 289.

- Conchillos, an Aragonian gentleman, employed by Ferdinand of Aragon, to obtain Joanna's confent to his regency of Castile, II. 12. Thrown into a dungeon by the Archduke Philip, ib.
- Confession of Augsburg, drawn up by Melancthon, 11. 51.

Conflance,

- Conflance, the privileges of that city taken away by the Emperor Charles V. for difobedience to the Interim, III. 497.
- Corfairs of Barbary, an account of the rife of, III. 97. See Algiers. Barbaroffa.
- Cortes of Aragon, acknowledges the Archduke Philip's title to the crown, II. 4. Not allowed to affemble in the name of Charles V. 66. Their opposition to his defires, ib. Is prevailed on by the Emperor to recognize his fon Philip as fuccesfor to that kingdom, III. 261. See Spain.
- Cortes of Castile, acknowledges the Archduke Philip's title to the crown, Il. 4. Is prevailed on to acknowledge Ferdinand regent, according to Ifabella's will, q. Acknowledges Philip and Joanna King and Queen of Castile, and their fon Charles, Prince of Atturias, 19. Declares Charles King, and votes him a free gift, 62. Summoned by Charles to meet at Compostella in Galicia, 92. Tumultuary proceedings thereupon, 93. A donative voted, 95. Lofes all its influence by the diffolution of the Holy Junta, 262. Its backwardness to grant supplies for the Emperor's wars in Italy, 391. Refuses his preffing folicitations for a fupply, 111. 9. Affembled at Toledo to grant supplies to the Emperor, 182. The remonstrances of, ib. The ancient constitution of, subverted by Charles, 183. See Spain.

of Valencia, prevailed on by the Emperor Charles V. to acknowledge his fon Philip fucceffor to that kingdom, III. 261. See Spain.

Cortona, Cardinal di, governor of Florence for the Pope, expelled by the Florentines, on the Pope's captivity, III. 4.

Cosmo di Medici. See Medici.

Cranmer, archbishop of Canterbury, annuls the marriage of Henry VIII. with Catharine of Aragon, which was refused to Henry by the Pope, III. 72. His fentence reversed by the Pope, 73.

Crefpy, peace of, between the Emperor and Francis, 111. 301.

Croy,

Croy, William de, nephew to Chievres, made archbifhop of Toledo, by Charles V. II. 65. Dies, 261.

D

- D'Albert, John, expelled from his kingdom of Navarre by Ferdinand of Aragon, 11. 26. Invades Navarre, but is defeated by Cardinal Ximenes, 50.
- D' Alembert, M. his observation on the order of Jefuits, HI. 218. Note.
- D'Andelet, brother to Coligni, is defeated by the Duke of Saxony in an endeavour to fuccour St. Quintin, IV. 272. But enters the town with the fugitives, 273. The town taken by affault, 270.
- Dauphin of France, eldeft fon of Francis I. is delivered up with the Duke of Orleans, to the Emperor Charles V. in exchange for his father, as hoftages for the performance of the ireaty of Madrid, II. 362. His death imputed to poifon, III. 151. The most probable cause of it, 152.
- Late Duke of Orleans, fecond fon of Francis I. commands an army and invades Spain, III. 258. Is forced to abandon the fiege of Perpignan, 259. Is diffatisfied at the peace of Crefpy, 307. Makes a fecret proteftation against it, 308.
  - Mary the young Queen of Scotland, III. 475. Is married to her, IV. 300.
- Denmark, a fummary view of the revolutions in, during the fixteenth century, III. 371.
- Smalkalde, III. 177.
- De Retz, Cardinal, writes a hiftory of Fiefco's confpiracy while a youth, III. 416. Note.
- Diana of Poitiers, mistress to Henry II. of France, affifts the Guises in perfuading Henry to an alliance with Pope Paul IV. against the Emperor, IV. 219. Induces Henry to break the treaty of Vaucelles, 246. Marries her grand-daughter to one of Montmorency's fons, fons, 309. Joins Montmorency against the Guises, ib.

Doria, Andrew, affists Lautrec in fubduing Genoa, III. 7. Conquers and kills Moncada in a fea engagement before the harbour of Naples, 18. His character, 20. Is difgusted with the behaviour of the French, 21. Revolts to the Emperor, 22. Opens to Naples a communication by fea, 23. Rescues Genoa from the French, 25. Restores the government of, to the citizens, 26. The respect paid to his memory, 27. Attends the Emperor Charles in his difastrous expedition against Algiers, 242. His partial fondness for his kinsman Giannetino, 402. His narrow escape in Lavagno's insurrection, 413. Returns on Lavagno's death. and the dispersion of his party, 416. See Genoa and Lavagno.

Giannetino, his character, III. 402. Is murdered by Lavagno's confpirators, 413.

Dover, an interview there between Henry VIII. and the Emperor Charles V. II. 108.

- Dragut, a corfair, commands the Turkish fleet which ravages the coast of Naples, IV. 128.
- Du Prat, chancellor of France, his character, II. 277. Commences a law-fuit against Charles Duke of Bourbon, for his estate, at the instigation of Louise the King's mother, ib.

Duelling, the cuftom of, how rendered general, III. 16. Its influence on manners, ib.

Duren in Cleves, taken by the Emperor Charles V. the inhabitants put to the fword, and the town burnt, III. 469.

E

Eccius, an adverfary of Luther's, holds a publick difputation with him at Leipfic, on the validity of the papal authority, II. 137.

Ecclefiastical centures of the Romish church, the dreadful effects of, II. 159.

Ecclesiaficas

Ecclefisfical Refervation, in the receis of the diet of Augíburg, remarks on, III. 61.

Edinburgh, plundered and burnt by the Earl of Hertford, III. 295.

Edward VI. of England, his character, IV. 154.

Egmont, count of, commands the cavalry at the battle of St. Quintin, and puts Montmorency's troops to flight, IV. 272. Engages Marshal de Termes, and defeats him by the casual arrival of an English squadron, 303.

Egypt, how and by whom added to the Ottoman Em-: pire, II. 72.

Ebrenburg, the castle of, taken by Maurice of Saxony, IV. 78.

Eignotz, a faction in Geneva fo termed, an account of, III. 126.

Elizabeth fifter of Mary, her acceffion to the crown of England, IV. 322. Her character, ib. Is addreffed by Philip of Spain, and Henry of France, for marriage, ib. Her prudent conduct between them, 324. How determined against Henry, 325. Her motives for rejecting Philip, 326. Returns Philip an evalive answer, ib. Demands restitution of Calais at the conferences at Chateau Cambres, 327. Establishes the Protestant religion in England, 328. Treaty between her and Henry figned at Chateau Cambres, 329.

Emmanuel Phillibert, Duke of Savoy. See Savoy.

England, by what means that kingdom was freed from the Papal fupremacy, and received the doctrines of the Reformation, 111. 73. Mary, Queen of, married to Prince Philip, fon of the Emperor Charles V. contrary to the fenfe of the nation, 1V. 156. The marriage ratified by parliament, 160. Is reluctantly engaged by Philip, now King of Spain, in the war againft France, 268. Mary levies money by her prerogative, to carry on the war, 269. Calais taken by the Duke of Guife, 294. Guifnes and Hames taken, ib. Death of Mary and acceffion of Elizabeth, 322. The Proteftant religion effablifhed by Elizabeth, 328. Treaty with France figned at Chateau Chateau Cambrefis, 329. Its interior firength how increated by the conduct of Henry VIII. 349. Its power no longer fruitlefsly wafled on the continent, 352. Alteration of its conduct toward Scotland, 353.

- Enguien, the count de, besieges Carignan, III. 289. Desires of Francis, permission to engage Guasto, 200. Defeats Guasto in a pitched battle, 201.
- Erard de la Mark, ambaffador of Charles V. to the diet of Frankfort, his private motives for thwarting the pretentions of Francis I. of France, to the Imperial crown, II. 84. Signs the capitulation of the Germanick body, on behalf of Charles, 86.
- Erafinus, fome account of, II. 172. Preceded Luther in his centures against the Romisch church, ib, Concurs with him in his intentions of reformation, 173, Motives which checked him in this, ib.
- Efcurial, palace of, built by Philip II. in memory of the battle of St. Quintin, IV. 281.
- Europe, a fhort view of the flate of, at the death of the Emperor Maximilian, II. 69. The contemporary monarchs of. all illuftrious, at the time of Charles V. 112. The method of carrying on war in, how improved beyond the practice of earlier ages, 285. The fentiments of, on Charles's treatment of the Pope, III. 1. A review of the flate of, during the reign of the Emperor Charles V. IV. 336. The remarkable change in, at this period, 338. How affected by the revolt of Luther againft the church of Rome, 356.

Eutemi, King of Algiers, engages Barbaroffa in his fervice, and is murdered by him, II. 98, 99.

Excommunication in the Romish church, the original institution of, and the use made of it, II. 159.

Farnefe, Alexander, his unanimous election to the Papacy, III. 74. See Paul III.

Cardinal, accompanies the troops fent by the Pope to the Emperor, against the aimy of the Protestant testant league, III. 373. Returns difgusted, 374. Leads the troops home again by the Pope's order, 399. Contributes to the election of Cardinal di Monte to the Papacy, IV. 6.

Farnefe, Octavio, grandfon of Pope Paul III. endeavours to furprife Parma, and enters into treaty with the Emperor, IV. 3. Is confirmed in Parma, by Julius, 32. Procures an alliance with France, 35: Is attacked by the Imperialist, but fuccessfully protected by the French, ib. Placentia reftored to him by Philip II. of Spain, 285.

Peter Lewis, natural fon of Pope Paul III. obtains of his father the dutchies of Parma and Placentia, III. 320. His character, 470, 471. Is affaffinated, 472.

Ferdinand King of Aragon, how he acquired his kingdoms, II. 2. Invites his daughter Joanna, and her hufband, Philip Archduke of Auftria, to Spain, 3. Becomes jealous of Philip, 4. Carries on his war with France vigoroufly, notwithftanding Philip's treaty with Lewis, 6. His Queen Isabella dies, and leaves him regent of Castile, under restrictions, 8. Refigns the kingdom of Caffile, and is acknowledged Regent by the Cortes, ib. His character, 9. His maxims of government, odious to the Caftilians, ib. Required by Philip to refign his regency, ii. Joanna's letter of confent procured by him, intercepted by Philip, and herfelf confined, 12. Is deferted by the Castilian nobility, ib. Determines to exclude his daughter from the fucceffion by marrying, 13. Marries Germaine de Foix, niece to Lewis XII. of France, 14. A treaty between him and Philip at Salamanca, by which the regency of Caftile is jointly vested in them, and Joanna, 15. Prevails on Henry VII. of England to detain Philip for three months, when driven on that coaft, 16. The Castilians declare against him, ib. Refigns the regency of Castile, by treaty, 17. Interview between him and Philip, ib. Is abfent, at Naples, when Philip died, 23. Returns and gains with the regency of Caftile, the good will of the natives by his Vol. IV. Dd prudentprudent administration, 24. Acquires by difhonourable means the kingdom of Navarre, 26. How he deftroyed his conftitution, 27. Endeavours to diminist his grandson Charles's power, by a will in favour of Ferdinand, ib. Alters his will in favour of Charles, 29. Dies, ib. Review of his administration, 34. Ximenes appointed by his will, regent of Castile, until the arrival of Charles V. 35.

Ferdinand, fecond fon of Philip Archduke of Auftria, born, II. 6. Left regent of Aragon, by his grandfather Ferdinand, 27. This revoked by a fublequent will, by which he obtains only a penfion, 29. Discontented with his disappointment, he is taken to Madrid under the eye of Cardinal Ximenes, 39. Sent by Charles V. to visit their grandfather Maximilian, 65. Is elected King of Hungary and Bohemia, 410. Signs a deed called the Reverfe, ib. The Emperor endeavours to get him elected king of the Romans, III. 55. He is opposed by the Protestants, 56. Is crowned King of the Romans, 57. Forms a confederacy against the Anabaptists at Munfter, 87. Opposes the restoration of Ulric Duke of Wurtemberg, 91. Recognizes his title and concludes a treaty with him, 92. His kingdom of Hungary wrested from him by John Zapol Scaepius, 232. Besieges the young King Stephen and his mother in Buda, but is defeated by the Turks, 235. His mean offers of fubmiffion to the Porte, ib. Which are rejected, 237. Courts the favour of the Protestants, 279. Opens the diet at Worms, 311. Requires it to fubmit to the decisions of the council of Trent, 312. Agrees to pay a tribute to Solyman for Hungary, 346. Encroaches on the liberties of Bohemia, 403. His rigorous treatment of Prague, 465. Difarms the Bohemians, ib. Obtains the fovereignty of the city of Constance, 497. Invades Tranfylvania by invitation of Martinuzzi, IV. 52. Obtains the refignation of Tranfylvania from Queen Ifabella, 54. Orders Martinuzzi to be affaffinated, 57. Enters into negociation with Maurice on behalf of of the emperor, 90. His motives for promoting the Emperor's agreeing with Maurice, 96. Ifabella and her fon Stephen, recover posseful of Tranfylvania, 141. Opens a diet at Augsburgh, and excites fuspicions in the Protestants, 192. The Emperor leaves the internal administration of German affairs to him, 196. Is again applied to by the Emperor to refign his pretensions of fuccession to Philip, but refuses, 197. Endeavours therefore to gain the friendship of the diet, 198. Again refuses the Emperor's folicitations, 254. Charles refigns the Imperial crown to him, 255. Affembles the college of Electors at Frankfort, which acknowledges him Emperor of Germany, 296. The Pope refuses to acknowledge him, 297.

Feudal government, a view of, as it existed in Spain, II. 230.

Fiefco, Count of Lavagna. See Lavagna.

— Jerome, engages in his brother's confpiracy, and fails in fecuring Andrew Doria, III. 412. His imprudent vanity on his brother's death, 414. Shuts himfelf up in a fort on his estate, 417. Is reduced and put to death, 425.

Flanders. See Netherlands.

Florence, the inhabitants of, revolt againft Pope Clement VII. on the news of his captivity, and recover their liberty, III 4. Are reduced to fubjection to Alexander di Medici, by the Emperor, 43. Alexander di Medici, Duke of, affaffinated by his kinfman Lorenzo, 166. Cofmo di Medici advanced to the fovereignty, 167. Cofmo, fupported by the Emperor, defeats the partifans of Lorenzo, 169. Cofmo afferts his independency on the Emperor, IV. 124.

Fonfeca, Antonio de, commander in chief of the forces in Spain, ordered by Cardinal Adrian to befiege the infurgents in Segovia, II. 228. Is denied liberty of taking military flores, by the inhabitants of Medina del Campo, ib. Attacks and almost burns the whole town, ib. Is repulsed, ib. His house at Valladolid burnt, 229.

Dd 2

France,

- France, the acquisitions of that kingdom, during the reign of the Emperor Charles V. IV. 344. The character of the people of, 346. The good confequences of the civil wars in that kingdom to the rest of Europe, 348.
- Francis I. King of France, concludes a peace with Charles V. and the conditions of the treaty, II. 55. Sends a fruitles embasfy to Charles for the restitution of Navarre to the young King, 67. Afpires to the Imperial crown at the death of Maximilian. 71. Reasons by which he supported his pretensions, Remarks on the equipages of his ambaffadors 72. to the German States, 75. His pretensions adopted by the Venetians, 76. Lofes the election, 85. Rife of the rivalfhip between him and Charles, 98. Courts the favour of Cardinal Wolfey, 106. Promifes Wolfey his interest for the Papacy, 108. Has an interview with Henry VIII. of England, 109. Wreftles with Henry, and throws him, ib. Note. His advantages over Charles, at the commencement of hostilities between them, 184. Concludes an alliance with the Pope, 188. Invades and reduces Navarre, in the name of Henry D'Albert, fon of John, the former King, 192. The French driven out by the imprudence of L'Esparre their general, who is taken prisoner by the Spaniards, 193. Retakes Mouson from the Imperialists, 197. Invades the Low-Countries, but loses the opportunities of fuccess by imprudence, ib. Rejects the demands of Charles at the congress at Calais, 198. A league concluded between Charles and Henry VIII. againft him, 199. His imprudent appointment of the Marechal de Foix to the government of Milan, 202. De Foix attacks Reggio, but is repulsed by the governor Guicciardini the historian, 203. The Pope declares against him, ib. His embarrassiments on the invalion of Milan, 205. His mother feizes the money appointed for payment of the Milanefe troop's, 206. Milan taken, and the French driven out, 208. Levies a body of Swifs, 213. Who infift оп on giving a precipitate battle to the Imperialis, which is loft, 214. War declared against him by Henry VIII. 216. His expedients to fupply his treasury, 217. The plan pursued by him to result the incursions of the English, 219. Picardy invaded by Henry, ib. The Venetians league with the Emperor against him, 272. To which Pope Adrian accedes, ib. His expeditious movement against the Milanese, 274. Disconcerted by the Duke of Bourbon's confpiracy, ib. Taxes him with betraying his caufe, which Bourbon denies, 279. Bourbon efcapes to Italy, and Francis returns, ib. Appoints the admiral Bonnivet to command against the Milanese, 280. Picardy invaded by the duke of Suffolk, who is driven back, 286. Repulses the invation of Guienne and Burgundy by Charles, 287. His fuccefsful clofe of the campaign, ib. His prudent care to difappoint the Imperialists in their invalion of Provence, 310. Affembles an army, which caufes the Imperialists to retire from Marseilles, ib. Determines to invade the Milanese, 313. Appoints his mother Louise regent during his absence, ib. Enters Milan, and takes possefiion of the city, 314. Advised by Bonnivet to befiege Pavia, 316. His vigorous attacks on Pavia, 317. Concludes a treaty of neutrality with Pope Clement, 319. His imprudent invalion of Naples, 320. Refolves by Bonnivet's advice to attack Bourbon's army, advanced to the relief of Pavia, 323. Is routed at the battle of Pavia, 324. Is taken prisoner, 326. Is fent to the castle of Pizzitchitone under the cuftody of Don Ferdinand Alarcon, 327. Refuses the propositions made to him by Charles, 339. Is carried to Spain on his desire of a perfonal interview with Charles, 340. Is rigoroufly treated in Spain, 349. Falls dangeroufly ill, 350. Is vifited by Charles, 351. Refolves to refign his kingdom, 355. Is delivered from his captivity by the treaty of Madrid, 357. His fecret protestations against the validity of this treaty, 359. Marries the Queen of Portugal, 360. Recovers his liberty, and the Dauphin and the Duke of Orleans delivered up hoftages to Charles for the performance of the treaty of Madrid, 362. Writes a letter of acknowledgment to Henry VIII. of England, 376. His reply to the Imperial ambaffadors, 377. Enters into a league with the Pope, the Venetians, and Sforza, against Charles, 3-9. Is abfolved from his oath to obferve the treaty of Madrid. 280. His behaviour to the Emperor's fecond embaffy, 383. Is dispirited by his former ill success, 384. Enters into a treaty with Henry VIII. of England against the Emperor, III. 2. Successes of his general Lautrec in Italy, 7. His reply to the Emperor's overtures, 13. Declares war against him, and challenges him to fingle combat, 14. Treats Andrew Doria ill, who revolts from him to the Emperor, 22. His army, under Saluces, driven out of Italy, 24. His troops in Milan routed, 28. His endeavours toward an accommodation, 29. Terms of the peace of Cambray, concluded by the mediation of his mother Louise and Margaret of Auftria, 32. Remarks on the facrifices made by him in this treaty, and on his conduct of the war, 33. Leagues fecretly with the Protestant Princes, 57. His measures to elude the treaty of Cambray, 68. His negociations with the Pope, 69. His interview and treaty with the Pope, 71. Gives the Duke of Orleans in marriage to Catherine di Medici, ib. Negociates a treaty with Francis Sforza, Duke of Milan, 116. His envoy Merveille executed at Milan for murder, 117. Is difappointed in his endeavours to negociate alliances against the Emperor, 118. Invites Melanchon to Paris, 119. Evidences his zeal for the Romish religion, 120. Caufes of his guarrel with the Duke of Savoy, 123. Seizes the Duke's territories, 124. His pretensions to the dutchy of Milan, on the death of Francis Sforza, 130. The Emperor's invective against him before the Pope in council, 133. Is invaded by Charles, 133. His prudent plan of defence, 142. Joins the army under Montmorency, 148. Death of the Dauphin, 150. Obtains a decree of the parliament liament of Paris, against the Emperor, 153. Invades the Low Countries, 154. A fuspension of arms in Flanders, and how negociated, 155. A truce in Piedmont, 156. Motives to these truces, 157. Concludes an alliance with Solyman the Magnificent, 158. Negociations for a peace with the Emperor, 160. Concludes a truce for ten years at Nice, 162. Reflections on the war, ib. His interview with Charles, 163. Marries Mary of Guife to James V. of Scotland, 171. Refuses the offers of the deputies of Ghent, 192. Informs Charles of the offer made by them, 193. Grants the Emperor leave to pass through France to the Netherlands, 195. His reception of the Emperor, 197. Is deceived by the Emperor in respect to Milan, 201. His ambaffador to the Porte, Rincon, murdered by the Imperial governor of the Milanefe, 253. Prepares to resent the injury, 254. Attacks the Emperor with five armies, 257. His first attempts rendered abortive, by the imprudence of the Duke of Orleans, 259. Renews his negociations with Sultan Solyman, 267. Invades the Low Countries, 268. Forces the Emperor to raife the fiege of Landrecy, 271. Dismisses Barbarossa, 288. Gives the count d'Enguien permission to engage Guasto, 290. Relieves Paris, in danger of being surprised by the Emperor, 300. Agrees to a feparate peace with Charles, 301. Henry's haughty return to his overtures of peace, 307. Death of the Duke of Orleans, 319. Peace of Campe, 381. Perceives a neceffity of checking the Emperor's ambitious defigns, 420. Forms a general league against him, ib. Dies, 425. His life and character fummarily compared with those of Charles, 426. Consequences of his death, 420.

Dd 3

05

Francis II. his acceffion to the crown of France, and character, 1V. 335.

Francfort, the diet of, affembled for the choice of an Emperor at the death of Maximilian, II. 80. Names and views of the Electors, ib. The Empire offered to Frederick of Saxony, 81. Who rejects

it,

It, with his reafons, 82. Choofes Charles V. Emperor, 85. His confirmation of the Germanick privileges required and agreed to, 86. City of, embraces the reformed religion, 295. The college of Electors affembled there by Ferdinand, who is acknowledged Emperor of Germany, IV. 296.

- Frederick Duke of Saxony, affembles with the other Electors at the diet of Frankfort, to choose an Emperor, II. 80. The Empire offered to him, 81. Rejects it, and votes for Charles V. 82. Refuses the presents of the Spanish ambassian and the present of the Spanish ambassian of the state o
- Fregolo, the French ambaffador to Venice, murdered by the Marquis del Guasto, the Imperial governor of the Milanefe, III. 253.
- Frondsperg, George, a German nobleman, fome account of, he joins the army of Charles V. II. 390,

G

General of the Jefuits, an enquiry into his office and defpotic authority, III. 208.

Geneva, an account of its revolt against the Duke of Sayov, III. 125.

Genoa, reduced by Lautrec, the French general, III. 7. The French endeavour to prejudice its trade in favour of Savona, 21. Is refcued from the French by Andrew Doria, 25. The government of, fettled by the difinterestedness of Doria, 26. The honour paid to Doria's memory, 27. Is visited by the Emperor, 39. A scheme formed to overturn the constitution of, by Fiesco, count of Lavagno, 404. He assembles his adherents, 408. The conspirators fally forth from Lavagno's palace, 412. Deputies fent to know Lavagno's terms, 413. Lavagno drowned, drowned, 414. The infurrection ruined by the imprudence of his brother Jerome Fielco, ib. The confpirators difperfe, 415. Jerome reduced and put to death, 425.

- Germanada, an affociation in Valencia, fo termed, on what occafion formed, II. 263. Refufe to lay down their arms, ib. Their refentment levelled at the nobility, who raife an army againft them, 264. Defeat the nobles in feveral actions, 265. But are routed and difperfed by them, ib.
- Germany, state of, at the death of the Emperor Maximilian, II. 69. Charles V. of Spain, and Francis I. of France, form pretentions to the Imperial crown, 71. Their respective reasons offered in favour of their claims, 72, 73. Views and interests of the other European States in relation to the competitors. 75. Henry VIII. of England, advances a claim, 76. But is discouraged from profecuting it, 77. How the Papacy was likely to be affected in the choice of an Emperor, 78. Advice of Pope Leo X. to the German Princes, ib. Opening of the diet at Frankfort, 80. In whom the election of an Emperor is vefted, ib. Views of the Electors, ib. The Empire offered to Frederick of Saxony, 81. Who rejects it, and his reafons, ib. Charles V. chofen, 85. The capitulation of the Germanic privileges confirmed by him, 86. Charles fets out for, 96. Charles crowned at Aix-la-Chapelle, 111. Commencement of the Reformation there, by Martin Luther, 113. Treatment of the bull of excommunication published against Luther, 140. The usurpations of the clergy there, during the disputes concerning investitures, 155. The clergy of, mostly foreigners, 161. The benefices of, nominated by the Pope, 162. The expedient of the Emperors for reftraining this power of the Pope, ineffectual, 163. The great progress of Luther's doctrines in, 295 Grievances of the pealants, 364. Infurrection in Suabia, 365. The memorial of their grievances, 366. The infurrection quelled, 367. Another infurrection in Thuringia, ib. How the house of Austria became so formidable midable in, 411. Proceedings relating to the Reformation there, ib. Great progrefs of the Reformation there, III. 44. Ferdinand King of Hungary and Bohemia, brother to Charles V. elected King of the Romans, 57. The Protestant religion eftablished in Saxony, 179. The Protestant religion established in the Palatinate, 323. The league of Smalkalde raife an army against the Emperor, 363. Are put under the ban of the Empire, 367. The Protestant army dispersed, 391. The Interim enforced by the Emperor, 402. Maurice of Saxony raifes an army, and declares in favour of the Protestants, IV. 71. Maurice favoured even by the Catholic princes, and why, 92. Treaty of Paffau, between the Emperor and Maurice of Saxony, 102. Truce between the Emperor and Henry of France, 239. Charles refigns the Imperial crown to his brother Ferdinand, 256.

- Ghent, an infurrection there, 111. 186. The pretenfions of the citizens, 187. Form a confederacy against the Queen-dowager of Hungary, their governess, 188. Their deputies to the Emperor, how created by him, ib. Offer to submit to France, 189. Is reduced by Charles, 199.
- Ghibeline faction, in Italy, a view of, II. 387.
- Giron, Don Pedro de, appointed to the command of the army of the Holy Junta, II. 245. Refigns his commission, and Padilla replaced, 278.
- Goletta in Africa, taken by the Emperor Charles V. III. 107.
- Gonzaga, the Imperial governor of Milan, procures Cardinal Farnese to be affaffinated, and takes posselfion of Placentia for the Emperor, 111. 472. Prepares to feize Parma, IV. 32. Is repulfed by the French, 36.
- Gouffer, fent by Francis I. King of France, to negociate a peace with Charles V. II. 55.
- Granvelle, Cardinal, his artifice to prevail on the count de Sancerre to surrender St. Difiere to the Emperor, III. 297. Endeavours to Jull the Protestants into fecurity with regard to the Emperor's conduct toward them, 332. Is commissioned by Philip to addrefs drefs the affembly at the Emperor's refignation of his hereditary dominions, IV. 234.

7

- Gravelines, an interview there between the Emperor Charles V. and Henry VIII. of England, II. 110.
- Grapper, canon of Cologne, is appointed a manager of the Protestant and Catholic conferences before the diet at Ratifbon, III. 227. Writes a treatife to compose the differences between them, ib. The fentiments of both parties on this work, 228.
- Granada, archbishop of, prefident of the council of Castile, his imprudent advice to Cardinal Adrian, relating to the infurrection in Segovia, II. 227.
- Guasto, the Marquis del, appointed governor of Milan, by the Emperor, III. 149. Procures Rincon the French ambaffador to the Porte, to be murdered on his journey thither, 253. Defends Carignan againft the French, 289. Defeated by d'Enguien in a pitched battle, 292.
- Guicciardini, his account of the publication of Indulgences contradicted, II. 125. Defends Reggio against the French, 203. Repulses an attack upon Parma, by the French, 210. His fentiments of the Pope's treaty with Lannoy viceroy of Naples, 398.
- Guife, Francis of Lorrain, Duke of, is made governor of Metz by Henry II. of France, IV. 113. His character, ib. Prepares to defend it against the Emperor, ib. His brother d'Aumale taken prisoner by the Imperialist, 118. The Emperor raises the fiege, 122. His humane treatment of the distress the fiege, 122. His humane treatment of the distress Henry to an alliance with Pope Paul IV. 219. Marches with troops into Italy, 261. Is unable to effect any thing, 262. Is recalled from Italy after the defeat of St. Quintin, 284. His reception in France, 289. Takes the field against Philip, ib. Invests and takes Calais from the English, 294. Takes also Guifnes and Hames, ib. Takes Thionville in Luxembourg, 302.
- Guife, Mary or, married to James V. of Scotland, III. 171. Fruffrates the intended marriage between her daughter Mary, and prince Edward of England, 287. Gurk,

- Gurk, Cardinal de, why he favoured the election of Charles V. to the Imperial crown, II. 84. Signs the capitulation of the Germanic body on behalf of Charles, 86.
- Gu/man, chancellor to the Emperor Ferdinand, is fent to Pope Paul IV. to notify the election, who refutes to fee him, IV. 297.

H

- Hamburgh, city of, embraces the reformed religion, II. 295.
- Haro, the conde de, appointed to command the army of the Caftilian nobles against the Holy Junta, II. 247. Attacks Tordefillas, and gets possefilian of Queen Joanna, ib. Routs the army of the Junta, and takes Padilla prisoner, who is executed, 256.
- Hasten Aga, deputy governor of Algiers, his piracies against the Christian states, III. 239. Is besieged in Algiers by the Emperor Charles V. 243. Makes a successful fally, 245. The Emperor forced by bad weather to return back again, 248.
- Hayradin, a potter's fon of Lefbos, commences pirate, 111. 97. See Barbaroffa.
- Heathens, ancient, why the principles of mutual toleration were generally admitted among them, IV. 202. Heldo, vice-chancellor to Charles V. attends the Pope's nuncio to Smalkalde, III. 174. Forms a Catholic league in opposition to the Protestant one, 177.

Henry II. King of France, his motives for declining an alkiance with Pope Paul III. againft the Emperor, III. 475. Procures for Scotland a peace with England, IV. 34. The young Queen Mary contracted to the Dauphin, and fent to France for education, ib. Enters into an alliance with Octavio Farnefe Duke of Parma, 35. Protefts againft the council of Trent, 36. Makes alliance with Maurice Elector of Saxony, 60. Seconds the operations of Maurice, 72. His army marches and feizes Metz, 75. Attempts to furprife Strafburgh, 86. Is ftrongly folicited to fpare it, 87. Returns, 88. The Emperor peror prepares for war against him, 112. Instigates the Turks to invade Naples, 127. Terrouane taken and demolished by Charles, 138. Hesdin taken, ib. Leads an army into the Low-Countries against Charles, 139. Endeavours to obstruct the marriage of Mary of England with Philip of Spain, 164. The progress of his arms against the Emperor, 166. Engages Charles, 168. Retires, ib. Cosmo di Medici, Duke of Florence, makes war against him, 171. Appoints Peter Strozzi commander of his army in Italy, 173. Strozzi defeated, 176. Siena taken, 178. Pope Paul IV. makes overtures to an alliance with him against the Emperor, 217. Montmorency's arguments against this alliance, ib. Is perfuaded by the Guifes to accept it, 218. Sends the Cardinal of Lorrain with powers to conclude it, 219. The Pope figns the treaty, 223. A truce for five years concluded with the Emperor, 239. Is exhorted by Cardinal Caraffa, to break the truce, 243. Is abfolved from his oath, and concludes a new treaty with the Pope, 246. Sends the Duke of Guife into Italy, 264. The Conftable Montmorency defeated and taken prisoner at St. Quintin, 273. Henry prepares for the defence of Paris, 276. St. Quintin taken by affault, 279. Collects his troops and negociates for affiftance, ib. His kind reception of the Duke of Guife, 289. Calais taken by Guife, 294. Impowers Montmorency to negociate a peace with Philip, 309. Honours him highly on his return to France, 310. Writes to Queen Elizabeth with propofals of marriage, 323. How he failed in his fuit, 324. His daughter married to Philip, and his fifter to the Duke of Savoy, 331. Terms of the treaty of Chateau Cambrefis, 332. The marriage of his fifter and daughter celebrated with great pomp, 334. His death, ib.

Henry VII. of England, detains the archduke Philip and his duchefs when driven on his coaft, three months, at the infligation of Ferdinand, II. 16.

Henry VIII. of England, fends an ambaffador to Germany to propofe his claims to the Imperial crown, II.

II. 77. Is difcouraged from his pretenfions, and takes no part with the other competitors, ib. His personal character and political influence in Europe. 102. Entirely guided by Cardinal Wolfey, 104. Receives a vifit from the Emperor Charles V. 108. Goes over to France to visit Francis, 109. Wreftles with Francis, and is thrown by him, ib. Note. Has another interview with Charles at Gravelines, 110. Charles offers to submit his differences with Francis to his arbitration, III. Publishes a treatife on the Seven Sacraments, against Martin Luther, 182. Obtains of the Pope the title of Defender of the Faith, 183. Takes part with Charles against Francis, 185. Sends Wolfey to negociate an accommodation between the Emperor and Francis, 197. Concludes a league with Charles against Francis, 100. His avowed reasons for this treaty, ib. His private motives, 200. Declares war against Francis, 216. Is vifited by Charles, 217. Makes descents upon the coaft of France, 218. Advances with an army into Picardy, 219. Obliged to retire by the Duke de Vendome, ib. Enters into a treaty with the Emperor and Charles Duke of Bourbon, 277. How he raifed supplies for his wars beyond the grants of his parliament, 286. Sends the Duke of Suffolk to invade Picardy, who penetrates almost to Paris, but is driven back, 287. Engages to affift Charles in an invalion of Provence, 308. Caules of his not fupporting the Imperialists, 311. Effects of the battle of Pavia, and captivity of Francis, on him, 331. Particulars of his embaffy to Charles, 333. Concludes a defensive alliance with France, 341. Is declared Protector of the league of Cognac against the Emperor, 379. His motives for affifting the Pope against the Emperor, III. 2. Enters into a league with Francis, and renounces the English claim to the crown of France, 4. Declares war against the Emperor, 14. Concludes a truce with the governess of the Low-Countries, 20. Projects his divorce from Catharine of Aragon, 36. Motives which withheld the Pope from granting it, 37. Acquiesces quiesces in the peace of Cambray, 38. Sends a supply of money to the Protestant league in Germany, 59. Procures his marriage to be annulled by Cranmer archbishop of Canterbury, 72. The divorce reverfed by the Pope under penalty of excommunication, 73. Renounces the Papal fupremacy, ib. Refuses to acknowledge any council called by the Pope, 94. Oppofes James V. of Scotland marrying Mary of Guife, 171. His difgufts with Francis and intercourfe with the Emperor, ib. Concludes a league with Charles, 263. Makes war with Scotland, 264. Particulars of his treaty with Charles, 265. Invades France and invefts Boulogne, 296. Refuses the Emperor's plan of opera-Is deferted by the Emperor, 306. tions, 300. Takes Boulogne, ib. His haughty proposals to Francis, 307. Peace of Campe, 361. Is fucceeded by his fon Edward VI. 422. A review of his policy, IV. 349.

- Hertford, earl of, plunders and burns Edinburgh, III. 295. Joins Henry after, in his invafions of France, ib.
- Heffe, the Landgrave of, procures the reftoration of his kiniman, Ulric Duke of Wurtemberg, III. 91. His views compared with those of the Elector of Saxony, 329. The Emperor's deceitful professions to him, 341. Quiets the aprehensions of the Protestant league with regard to the Emperor, ib. Is appointed joint commander of the army of the league with the Elector of Saxony, 371. Their characters compared, ib. Urges an attack of the Emperor, but is opposed by the Elector, 376. His letter to Maurice Duke of Saxony, 387. The army of the league disperse, 391. Is reduced to accept harsh terms from Charles, 450. His humiliating reception by the Emperor, 454. Is detained in confinement, 456. His offers of fubmiffion flighted by the Emperor, 490. Is carried by the Emperor with him into the Netherlands, 494. Renews his endeavours for liberty, IV. 25. Charles releafes arbitrarily the Elector of Brandenburgh, and Maurice, from their engagements engagements to him, ib. Obtains his liberty by the treaty of Paffau, 102. Is arrefted by the Queen of Hungary, but freed by the Emperor, 109. The effects of his confinement on him, ib.

Heuterus, his account of Lewis XII. fhewn to contradict the relations given by Bellay and other French historians of the education of Charles V. II. 30. Note.

Holy Junta. See Junta.

Holy League, against the Emperor Charles V. formed at Cognac, under the protection of Henry VIII. of England, II. 379.

Horuc, a potter's fon of Lefbos, commences pirate, with his brother Hayraydin, III. 97. See Barbaroffa. Hungary, is invaded by Solyman the Magnificent, and its King Lewis II. killed, II. 409. His fucceffes, and the number of prifoners carried away, ib. The archduke Ferdinand elected King of, together with Bohemia, 410. John Zapol Scaepius wrefts it from Ferdinand, 232. Stephen fucceeds on the death of his father John, 233. Is treacheroufly feized by Solyman, 236. See Ifabella, and Martinuzzi.

Ι

- James V. of Scotland, levies troops to affift Francis in Provence, but his intention frustrated, III. 170. His negociations for marriage with Francis's daughter, ib. Marries Mary of Guife, 171. Dies, and leaves Mary his infant daughter to fucceed him, 264. See Mary.
- Jesuits, the order of, by whom founded, II. 192. Character of that order, ib. Character of Ignatio Loyola their founder, III. 204. The order confirmed by the Pope, 205. An examination into the conftitution of the order, 206. Office and power of their general, 208. The rapid progress of the order, 212. Engage in trade, and eftablish an empire in South America, 214. Bad tendency of the order, 216. Are responsible for most of the pernicious effects of Popery fince their institution, 217. Advantages resulting from their institution, ib. 'Civilize the the natives of Paraguay, 219. Their precautions for the independency of their empire there, 221. How the particulars of their government and inflitution came to be disclosed, 224. Summary of their character, 225.

- Indulgences, in the Romifh church, the doctrine of, explained, II. 115. By whom first invented, 116. Martin Luther preaches against them, 121. Writes against them to Albert Elector of Mentz, 122. A bull issued in favour of, 135. The sale of, opposed in Switzerland by Zuinglius, 137.
- Infantedo, Duke of, his haughty referitment of a cafual blow on his horfe, III. 185. Is protected by the Conftable of Caftile, ib.
- Innocent, a young domeffic of Cardinal di Monte, obtains his Cardinal's hat, on his election to the Papacy, IV. 7.
- Interim, a fyftem of theology fo called, prepared by order of the emperor Charles V. for the ufe of Germany, III. 481. Is difapproved of, both by Proteftants and Papifts, 485.
- Inveflitures, usurpations of the Romish clergy in Germany, during the disputes between the Emperors and Popes, concerning, II. 155.
- Joanna, daughter of Ferdinand, and mother of Charles V. vifits Spain with her hufband Philip archduke of Auftria, II. 4. Is flighted by her hufband, 5. Her character, ib. Is abruptly left in Spain by her hufband, ib. Sinks into melancholy on the occation, and is delivered of her second fon Ferdinand, 6. Her letter of confent to her father's regency of Castile intercepted, and herself confined, 12. Made joint regent of Caftile with Ferdinand and Philip, by the treaty of Salamanca, 15. Sets out for Spain with Philip, are driven on the coaft of England and detained three months by Henry VII. 16. Acknowledged Queen by the Cortes, 19. Her tendernefs to her hufband in his ficknefs, and extraordinary attachment to his body when dead, 20. Is incapable of government, 21. Her fon Charles affumes the crown, 40. The Cortes acknowledge her fon VOL. IV. Ee Kings daughter to Sigifmund King of Poland, married to John King of Hungary, 111. 233. Her character, 234. Is treacheroufly carried with her infant fon into Tranfylvania by Sultan Solyman, 236. The government of this province and the education of her fon committed to her jointly with Martinuzzi, IV. 51. Is jealous of Martinuzzi's influence, and courts the Turks, ib. Is prevailed on to refign Tranfylvania to Ferdinand, 54. Retires to Silefia, ib. Recovers poffeffion of Tranfylvania, 141.

King, with a refervation in her favour, 66. Her reception of Padilla the chief of the Spanish malecontents, 233. The holy Junta removed to Tordefillas, the place of her refidence, 234. Relapses into her former melancholy, ib. The proceedings of the Holy Junta carried on in her name, 235. Is feized by the Conde de Haro, 247. Dies, after near fifty years confinement, IV. 229.

- John Zapol Scaepius, by the affiltance of Sultan Solyman, eftablifhes himfelf in the kingdom of Hungary, III. 232. Leaves the kingdom to his fon Stephen, 233. See Hungary, Ifabella, and Martinuzzi.
- Jabella, daughter of John II. of Caftile, and wife of Ferdinand King of Aragon, her hiftory, II. 2. Her concern at the archduke Philip's treatment of her daughter Joanna, 5. Her death and character, 7. Appoints Ferdinand regent of Caftile under reftrictions, 8.

V. II. 362.

Italy, confequences of the league between Pope Leo X. and the Emperor Charles V. to, II. 201. The characters of the Italians, Spaniards, and French, contrafted, ib. State of, at the acceffion of Clement VII. to the Papacy, 288. Views of the Italian States with respect to the Emperor and Francis on the expulsion of the French from Genoa and the Milanele, 307. Their apprehensions on the battle of Pavia and captivity of Francis, 334. The principal States join in the Holy league against the Emperor, 379. Are difgusted at the tardinels of Francis, 386. A view A view of the Ghibeline faction, 387. Sentiments of the States of, on the peace of Cambray, III. 35. Is vifited by the Emperor Charles, 38. The motives of his moderation toward the States of, 40. A league among the States of, formed by Charles, 67. Placentia granted to Octavio Farnefe by Philip II. of Spain, IV. 285. The inveftiture of Siena given by Philip to Cofmo di Medici, 288. The confequence of thefe grants, ib.

- Junta, Holy, a view of the confederacy in Spain, fo termed, II. 231. The authority of Adrian disclaimed by, 232. Removed to Tordefillas, where Queen Joanna refided, 234. Their proceedings carried on in the name of Joanna, 235. Receives letters from Charles to lay down their arms, with promifes of pardon, 236. Remonstrance of grievances drawn up by, 237. The particulars of this remonstrance, 238. Remarks on the spirit of it, 242. Are intimidated from presenting it to Charles, 244. Propofe to deprive Charles of his royalty during the life of Joanna, ib. Take the field, 245. Character of their army, ib. The Queen feized by the Conde de Haro, 247. How they obtained money to support their army, 249. Lose time in negociating with the nobles, 250. Propofe to make their peace with Charles at the expence of the nobles, 252 Their irrefolute conduct, 253. Their army defeated by Haro, and Padilla taken prisoner, 255. Padilla executed, 256. His letters to his wife, and the city of Toledo, 257. The ruin of the confederacy, 258.
- Julius II. Pope, observations on the pontificate of, II. 149.

III. Pope, his character, IV. 6. Beftows his Cardinal's hat infamoufly, 7. Is averfe to the calling a council, 9. Summons one at Trent, 10. Afferts his fupreme authority peremptorily in the bull for it, 22. Repents confirming Octavio Farnefe in Parma, 32. Requires Octavio to relinquifh his alliance with France, 35. The manner of his death, 194.

La

L

- La Chau, a Flemifh gentleman, affociated by Charles V. w.th Cardinal Ximenes in the regency of Caftile, 11. 49.
- Landre.y, fiege of, by the Emperor Charles V. III. 270. Is abandoned by him, 271.
- Lannoy, mortgages the revenues of Naples, to fupply the exigencies of the Emperor, II. 315. Francis furrenders himfelf prifoner to him at the battle of Pavia, 326. His cautious difpofal of him, 327. Delivers him up in purfuance of the treaty of Madrid, and receives the Duke of Orleans and the Dauphin, as hoftages in exchange, 362. Is fent ambaffador to Francis to require his fulfilment of the treaty of, 382. Concludes a treaty with the Pope, 398. Marches to join the Imperialifts at Rome, where the troops refuge to obey him, III. 5.
- Lanuza, Don John de, made viceroy of Aragon, on the departure of Charles V. for Germany, II. 95. Composes the diffurbances there, 265.
- Lavagna, John Lewis Fiefco, count of, his character, 111. 403. Meditates fubverting the government of Genoa, 404. His preparations, 405. His artful method of affembling his adherents, 408. His exhortation to them, 409. His interview with his wife, 410. Sallies forth, 412. Andrew Doria efcapes, 413. Deputies fent to know his terms, ib. Is drowned, 414. His brother's vanity ruins their defign, ib. See Fiefco.
- Lautree, Odet de Foix, marechal de, the French governor of Milan, his character, II. 202. Alienates the affections of the Milanefe from the French, ib. Invefts Reggio, but is repulfed by Guicciardini the historian, then governor, 202. Is excommunicated by the Pope, 204. The money for paying his troops, feized by Louife of Savoy, 206. Is left by his Swifs troops, 207. Is driven out of the Milanefe territories, 209. A new body of Swifs under him infift on giving battle to the Imperialists, who defeat him, 214. The Swifs leave him, 215. Retires Retires into France with the refidue of his troops, ib. Delivers up the Dauphin and Duke of Orleans, in exchange for Francis I, as hoftages for the performance of the treaty of Madrid, 262. Is appointed generalifimo of the league against the Emperor, III. 6. His fucceifes in Italy, 7. Motives which withheld him from fubduing the Milanefe, 8. Obliges the Prince of Oran e to retire to Naples, 17. Blockades Naples, 18. His army wafted, and himfelf killed by the peftilence, 24.

- Learning, the revival of, favourable to the reformation of religion, II 169.
- Leiph:, a public disputation held there by Martin Luther, and Eccius, on the validity of the Papal authority, II. 137.
- Leo X. Pope of Rome, his character, II. 78. His apprehensions on the election of an Emperor of Germany, at the death of Maximilian, ib. His counsel to the German Princes, 79. Grants Charles V. a tenth of all ecclefi flical benefices in Caffile, 89. Lays Caffile under an interdict, but takes it off, at the inflance of Charles, ib. His conduct on the profpect of war between Charles and Francis, 100. Situation of the Papacy at his acceffion, and his views of policy, 115. His inattention to Martin Luther's controverly with the Dominicans, concerning indulgences, 127. Is infligated against him, and summons him to Rome, ib. Defires the Elector of Saxony not to protect him, 128. Is prevailed on to permit Luther's doctrines to be examined in Germany, ib. Cardinal Cajetan appointed to try him, 129. Iffues a bull in favour of Indulgences, 135. A fuspension of proceedings against Luther, and why, 136. Publishes a bull of excommunication against him, 139. The political views of his conduct between Charles and Francis, 186. Concludes a treaty with Francis, 188. Concludes a treaty also with Charles, 189. The conditions of the treaty with Charles, ib. Its confequences to Italy, 201. Is disappointed in a scheme formed by Meronè, chancellor of Milan, for attack-Ec 3 ing ing that dutchy, 203. Excommunicates Marechal de Foix for his attack of Reggio, and declares againft France, 204. Takes a body of Swifs into pay, ib. The French driven out of the Milanefe, 209. He dies, ib. The fpirit of the confederacy broken by his death, ib.

- L'Esparre, Foix de, commands the French troops in Navarre for Henry D'Albert, II. 192. Reduces that kingdom, ib. His imprudent progrefs into Caftile, 193. Is taken prifoner by the Spaniards, and the French driven out of Navarre, 194.
- Leonard, father, forms a fcheme of betraying Metz to the Imperialists, IV. 185. Introduces foldiers clad like friars, ib. Is detected, 187. Is murdered by his monks, 189.
- Levefque, Don, his account of the motives which induced the Emperor Charles V. to refign his hereditary dominions, IV. 227. Note.
- Lewis II. King of Hungary and Bohemia, his character, II. 409. Is invaded and killed by Solyman the Magnificent, ib.

XII. King of France, receives homage of the Archduke Philip, for the earldom of Flanders, II. 3. Concludes a treaty with him, while at war with Ferdinand of Aragon, 6. Beftows his niece, Germaine de Foix, on Ferdinand, and concludes a peace with him, 14. Lofes the confidence of Philip on that occafion, 29, Note. Beftows his eldeft daughter, already betrothed to Charles V. on the count of Angoulême, ib.

Leyva, Antonio de, defends Pavia for the Emperor against Francis, II. 317. His vigorous defence, 318. Sallies out at the battle of Pavia, and contributes to the defeat of Francis, 325. Is left governor of Milan by the Duke of Bourbon, 394. Defeats the forces there, III. 28. Is appointed generalistimo of the Italian league, 67. Directs the operations of the invation of France, under the Emperor, 138. Dies, 148.

Lorenzo

Literature, its obligations to the order of Jesuits, III. 218.

Lorenzo di Medici. See Medici.

Louise of Savoy, mother of Francis I. of France, her character, II. 205. Her motives for feizing the money appointed for payment of Marechal Lautrec's troops, 206. Caufe of her averfion to the houfe of Bourbon, 275. Her advances toward a marriage with Charles Duke of Bourbon, rejected by him, 276. Determines to ruin him, ib. Instigates a law-fuit against him for his estates, 277. Goes to diffuade Francis from his intended invafion of the Milanefe, who will not wait for her, 313. Is appointed regent during his absence, ib. Her prudent conduct on the defeat of Pavia, and captivity of her fon Francis, 330. Concludes a defensive alliance with Henry VIII. 341. Ratifies the treary of Madrid for the recovery of her fon's liberty, 361, Undertakes with Margaret of Savoy, to accommodate the differences between the Emperor and Francis, III. 30. Articles of the peace of Cambray, 32.

- Loyola, Ignatio, commands the caffle of Pampeluna in Navarre, and is wounded in its defence, II. 192. His enthuliastic turn of mind, ib. The founder of the fociety of Jefuits, ib. Prevails on the Pope to eftablish the order, III. 205. An examination into the conflitution of the order, 206. Office and power of the general, 208. The rapid progress of the order, 212. See Jesuits.
- Lorrain, Cardinal of, perfuades Henry II. of France, to accept the offered alliance with Pope Paul IV. and is fent to Rome to negociate it, IV. 210. His imprudent behaviour towards the duchefs of Valentinois, 308.
- Lunenburgh, Duke of, avows the opinions of Luther, 11. 295.
- Luther, Martin, the happy confequences of the opinions propagated by him, II. 113. Attacks Indulgences, 119. His birth and education, ib. Chofen philosophical professor at the university of Wittemberg, 120. Inveighs against the publishers of Indulgences, 121. Writes to Albert Elector of Mentz, against them, 122. Composes these against Ee4 Indulgences, Indulgences, ib. Is supported by the Augustinians, and encouraged by Frederick Elector of Saxony, 123. Is fummoned to Rome by Pope Leo, 127. Obtains of the Pope leave to have his doctrines examined in Germany, 129. Appears before Cardinal Cajetan at Augfburg, ib. His refolute reply to the peremptory order of Cajetan, to retract his principles, 130. Withdraws from Augfburg, and appeals from the Pope ill-informed, to the Pope when better informed concerning him, 131. Appeals to a general council, 134 The death of Maximilian, how of fervice to him, 135. Queftions the Papal authority in a public disputation, 137. His opinions condemned by the universities of Cologne and Louvain, 138. A bull of excommunication published against him, 139. Pronounces the Pope to be Antichrift, and burns the bull, 140, 141. Reflections on the conduct of the court of Rome, toward him, 142. Reflections on his conduct, 144. 'Cautes which contributed to favour his opposition to the church of Rome, 147. Particularly the art of printing, 168. And the revival of learning, 169. He is fummoned to appear at the diet of Worms, 177. A fafe-conduct granted him thither, ib. His reception there, 178. Refuses to retract his opinions, 179. Departs, ib. An edict published against him, ib. He is feized and concealed at Wartburgh, 180. Progress of his doctrines, 181. The university of Paris publishes a decree against him, ib. Wrote against by Henry VIII. of England, ib. Answers both, 183. Withdraws from his retreat to check the inconfiderate zeal of Carloftadius, 293. Undertakes a tranflation of the Bible, 294. His doctrines avowed by feveral of the German Princes, 295. His moderate and prudent conduct, 373. Marries Catharine a Boria, a nun, ib. The great progrefs of his doctrines among the Germanic States, III. 44. Encourages the Protestants difpirited by the Emperor's decree against him, 54. His concern at the practices of the Anabaptifts at Munfter, 87. Is invited to Leipfick, by Henry Dake çí of Saxony, 180. His opinion of Gropper's treatile to unite the Proteftants and Catholics, 228. Dies, 334. Summary of his character, 335. Extract from his laft will, 339, Note. See Proteflants. A view of the extraordinary effects of his revolt from the church of Rome, on that court and on Europe in general, IV. 355.

Luxemburg, invaded by Robert de la Marck, lord of Bouillon, II. 195. Invaded and over-run by the Duke of Orleans, III. 258. Is again invaded by Francis, 269.

M

- Modrid, treaty of, between the Emperor Charles V. and his prifoner Francis I. King of France, 11. 357. Sentiments of the public with regard to this treaty, 358.
- Magdeburg, the city of, refules to admit the Interim enforced by Charles V. and prepares for defence, IV. 20. Maurice Elector of Saxony appointed to reduce it, 21. Is put under the ban of the Empire, 40. The territories of, invaded by George of Mecklenburg, ib. The inhabitants defeated in a fally, 41. Maurice of Saxony arrives and belieges the city, 42. Surrenders, 43. The fenate elects Maurice their burgrave, 45.

Mahmed, King of Tunis, hiftory of his fons, III. 101.

- Majorca, an infurrection there, 11. 260. Which is quelled with difficulty, ib. The moderation of Charles towards the infurgents, on his arrival in Spain, 268.
- Majefty, the appellation of, affumed by Charles V. on his election to the Imperial crown, and taken by all the other monarchs of Europe, II. 87.

Malines, council of, an account of, III. 189.

Malta, the ifland of, granted by the Emperor Charles V. to the knights of St. John, expelled from Rhodes by the Turks, II. 222.

Mamalukes, extirpated by Sultan Selim II. II. 72. Mammelukes, Mammelukes, a faction in Geneva, fo termed, fome account of, III. 126.

- Manuel, Don John, Ferdinand's ambaffador at the Imperial court, pays his court to the archduke Philip on Queen Ifabella's death, II. 11. Intercepts Joanna's letter of confent to Ferdinand's regency of Caffile, 12. 'Negociates a treaty between Ferdinand and Philip, 15. Declares for Maximilian's regency on Philip's death, 22. Is made Imperial ambaffador at Rome, and concludes an alliance between Charles V. and Leo X. 189. The conditions of the treaty, ib. Procures Adrian of Utrecht to be elected Pope, 212.
- Marcellus II. Pope, his character, IV. 208. Dies, 209.
- Marciano, battle of, between Peter Strozzi, and the marquis de Marignano, IV. 175.
- Margaret of Auftria, and Dowager of Savoy, aunt to Charles V. undertakes with Louife, mother of Francis I. of France, to accommodate the differences between those two monarchs, III. 30. Articles of the peace of Cambray, 32.
- Marignano, marquis of, appointed commander of the Florentine army, acting against the French, IV. 172. Defeats the French army under Peter Strozzi, 176. Lays siege to Siena, ib. Converts the siege into a blockade, 178. Siena furrenders, ib. Reduces Porto Ercole, 181. His troops ordered into Piedmont by the Emperor, 182.
- Marck, Robert de la, lord of Bouillon, declares war against the Emperor Charles V. II. 194. Ravages Luxemburg with French troops, 195. Is commanded to difband his troops by Francis, ib. His territories reduced by the Emperor, ib.
- Marfeilles, befieged by the Imperialists, II. 309. Refcued by Francis, 310. Interview and treaty there between the Pope and Francis, III. 71.
- Martinuzzi, bifhop of Waradin, is appointed guardian to Stephen, King of Hungary, III. 233. His character, 234. Solicits the affiftance of Sultan Solyman against Ferdinand, 235. Solyman feizes the the kingdom, 436. Is appointed to the government of Transvivania and the education of the young King jointly with the Queen, IV. 51. Negociates with Ferdinand, 52. Prevails on the Queen to refign Transvivania to Ferdinand, 54. Is appointed governor of Transvivania, and made a Cardinal, 55. Is affaffinated by Ferdinand's order, 57.

- Martyr, Peter, his authority cited in proof of the extortions of the Flemish ministers of Charles V. II. 64.
- Mary of Burgundy, contracted to Lewis XII. of France, but married to the Emperor Maximilian, II. 2.
- Mary of England, her acceffion, IV. 154. Receives propofals from the Emperor Charles V. of marrying his fon Philip, 155. The Englifh averfe to this union, ib. The houfe of commons remonstrates against the match, 156. The articles of marriage, 157. The marriage ratified by parliament, and completed, 160. Re-establishes the Romish religion, 161. Perfecutes the reformers, 162. Invites Charles to England on his refignation and paffage to Spain, which he declines, 256. Is engaged by Philip to affift him in his war against France, 268. Levies money by her prerogative to carry on the war, 269. Her neglect in the fecurity of Calais, 292. Calais invested and taken by the Duke of Guife, 294. Dies, 322.
- Mary, daughter of James V. of Scotland, fucceeds to the crown an infant, III. 264. Is contracted to the Dauphin of France, 474. Is educated at the court of France, IV. 34. 300. The marriage completed, ib. Affumes the title and arms of England on the death of Mary, 324.
- Matthias, John, a baker, becomes a leader of the Anabaptifts, at Munfter, 111. 79 Seizes the city and eftablifhes a new form of government there, 80. Repulfes the bifhop of Munfter, 82. Is killed, ib. See Bocold and Anabaptifts.
- Maurice; duke of Saxony, his motives for not acceding to the Protestant league of Smalkalde, III. 275. Marches Marches to the affiftance of Ferdinand in Hungary, 2.6 His difference with his coufin the Elector. ib. His conduct at the diet of Worms, 315. Joins the Emperor against the Protestants, 364. His motives, 382. His infidious conduct toward the Elector, 384. Seizes the electorate of Saxony, 388. Saxony recovered by the Elector, 396. His ineffectual endeavours to reduce Wittemberg, for the Emperor, 442. Obtains poffession of the electorate, 448. Is formally invefted at the diet of Augfburg, 484. Becomes diffatisfied with the Emperor, IV. 11. His motives to difcontent explained, 13. His address and aution in his conduct, 15. Enforces the Inter m in his territories, 16. Makes. neverthelefs, protetlions of his attachment to the Reformation, 17. Undertakes to reduce Magdeburg to fubmit to the Interim, 18. Protefts against the council of Trent, 19. Is commissioned by the Emperor to reduce Magdeburg, 21. Joins George of Mecklenburg before Magdeburg, 40. The city capitulates, 43. Begins to intrigue with Count Mansfeldt, 44. Is elected Burgrave of Magdeburg, 45. Difmiffes his troops, 47 His address in amufing the Emperor, 48. Makes an alliance with Henry II. of France, to make war on the Emperor, 59. Makes a formal requifition of the Landgrave's liberty, 63. Joins his troops, and publishes a manifesto, 70. Takes poffession of Augsburg and other cities, 73. An ineffectual negociation with Charles, 75. Defeats a body of the Emperor's troops, 78. Takes the caffle of Ehrenburg, ib. Is retarded by a mutiny in his troops, 79. Enters Inspruck, and narrowly miffes taking Charles, 81. A negociation between him and Ferdinand, 91. Befieges Frankfort on the Maine, 99. His inducements to an accommodation, 100. Signs a treaty with the Emperor at Paffau, 101. Reflections on his conduct in this war, 103. Marches into Hungary to oppose the Turks, 107. Is placed at the head of the league against Albert of Brandenburg, 132. Defeats Albert, but is killed in in the battle, 133. His character, 134. Is fucceeded by his brother Augustus, 136.

- Maximilian, Emperor of Germany, claims the regency of Caftile on his fon Philip's death, II. 22. Is fupported in his claim by Don John Manuel, ib. Lofes it, 24. Obtains the government of the Low-Countries by the death of Philip, 29. Appoints William de Croy, lord of Chievres, to fuperintend the education of his grandfon Charles, ib. Concludes a peace with France and Venice, 56. Dies, 69. State of Europe at this period, ib. His endeavours to fecure the Imperial crown to his grandfon Charles, 70. How obftructed, ib.
- Mecklenburg, George of, invades the territories of Magdeburgh for the Emperor, IV. 40. Defeats the Magdeburghers who fally out on him, 41. Is joined by Maurice of Saxony, who affumes the fupreme command, ib.
- Medecino, John James; fee Marignano.
- Medici, Alexander, reftored to the dominions of Florence, by the Emperor Charles III. 43. Is affaffinated, 165.
- Medici, Cardinal de, elected Pope, and affumes the title of Clement VII. II. 283. See Clement VII.
- Medici, Catherine di, is married to the Duke of Orleans, III. 71. Is conjectured, by the Emperor Charles V. to have poiloned the Dauphin, 152.
- Medici, Cofmo de, made Duke of Florence, III. 167. Is fupported by the Emperor, and defeats the partizans of Lorenzo, 169. Afferts his independency against the Emperor, IV. 124. Offers to reduce Siena for the Emperor, 171. Enters into a war with France, ib. See Marignano. His addrefs in procuring the investiture of Siena from Philip II. of Spain, 286. It is granted to him, 288.
- Medici, Lorenzo de, affaffinates his kinfman Alexander III. 166. Flies, 167. Attempts to oppofe Cofmo, but is defeated, 168.
- Medina del Campo, the inhabitants of, refufe to let Fonfeca take the military flores there, for the fiege of the infurgents in Segovia, II. 228. The town almost almost burnt by Fonseca, ib. The inhabitants repulse him, ib. Surrenders after the battle of Villalar, and diffolution of the Holy Junta, 258.

- Melanethon, imbibes the opinions of Martin Luther, II. 142. Is employed to draw up a confession of faith by the Protestant Princes at the diet of Augfburg, III 51. Is dejected by the Emperor's decree against the Protestants, but comforted by Luther, 54. Is invited to Paris by Francis, 119. His conference with Eckius, 226. Is prevailed on to favour the Interim enforced by the Emperor, IV. 16.
- Melito, Conde de, made viceroy of Valencia, on the departure of Charles V. for Germany, II. 95. Appointed to command the troops of the nobles against the Germanada, 264. Defeated by them in feveral actions, 265. Deftroys the affociation, ib.
- Mentz, archbishop of, artfully declares before the Emperor, the diet of Augsburg's acceptance of the Interim, without being authorised by it, III. 483.
- Merville, a Milanefe gentleman, employed as envoy from Francis I. to Francis Sforza, Duke of Milan, his fate, III. 116, 117.
  - Metz, feized by Montmorency the French general, IV. 75. The Duke of Guile made governor of, 113. Is befieged by the Emperor, 116. The Emperor defifts, and retires in a diftreffed condition, 122. A feheme formed by father Leonard to betray the city to the Imperialifts, 185. The confpiracy detected by the governor, 187. Leonard murdered by his monks, and his affociates executed, 189.
  - Mezieres, in France, befieged by the Imperialists, II. 196. Gallant defence of, by the chevalier Bayard, ib. The fiege raifed, ib.
  - Milan, marechal de Foix appointed to be the French governor of, II. 202. His character, ib. The Milanefe alienated from the French by his oppreffions, ib. Invaded by the ecclefiaftical troops under Profper Colonna, 204. The French driven out, 207. Opprefied by the Imperial troops, 272. Invaded by the French, 280. Who are driven out by Colonna, Colonna, 282. The Imperial troops there mutiny for pay, but are appealed by Morone, 289. Abandoned by the French, 290. Over-run again by Francis, who feizes the city, 314. The French retire on news of the battle of Pavia, 327. The inveftiture of, granted to Sforza, 342. Taken from him and granted to the Duke of Bourbon, 354. Diforders committed by the Imperial troops there, 378. Oppreflive measures of Bourbon to supply his mutinous troops, 392. The French forces there defeated by Antonio de Leyva, III. 28. Is again granted by the Emperor to Sforza, 42. Death of Sforza, 129. The pretensions of Francis to that dutchy, 130. Is feized by the Emperor, ib. The marquis del Guasto appointed governor, 149.

- Mohacz, battle of, between Solyman the Magnificent and the Hungarians, II. 409.
- Monastic orders, enquiry into the fundamental principles of, III. 206. Peculiar constitution of the order of Jesuits, 207.
- Moncado, Don Hugo di, the Imperial Ambaffador at Rome, his intrigues with Cardinal Colonna, againft Pope Clement II. 388. Reduces the Pope to an accommodation, 389. Is defeated and killed by Andrew Doria in a naval engagement before the harbour of Naples, III. 18.
- Monluc, is fent by the count d'Enguien to Francis forpermiffion to give battle to the marquis del Guafto, 111. 289. Obtains his fuit by his fpirited arguments, 290. Commands in Siena, when befieged by the marquis de Marignano, IV. 176. His vigorous defence, 177. Is reduced by famine, and capitulates, 178.
- Monte Alcino, numbers of the citizens of Siena retire thither after the reduction of that city by the Florentines, and effablish a free government there, IV. 179.
- Montecuculi, Count of, accufed and tortured for poifoning the Dauphin, charges the Emperor with infligating it, III. 151.

Montmorency,

Asontmorency, mareschal, his character, III. 1430 Francis adopts his plan for refifting the Emperor, and commits the execution to him, ib. His precautions, ib. His troops despise his conduct, 146. Observations on his operations, 149. Is disgraced, 256. Conducts the army of Henry II. to join Maurice of Saxony, and feizes Metz, 75. Diffuades Henry from accepting the offered alliance with Pope Paul IV. IV. 217. Commands the French army against the Duke of Savoy, 272. Detaches D'Andelot to relieve St. Quintin, ib. Exposes himfelf imprudently to an action, and is defeated, 273. Is taken prisoner, 274. Negociates a peace between Philip and Henry, 309. Returns to France, and is highly honoured by Henry, 310. His affiduity in forwarding the negociations, 327. His expedient for promoting the treaty of Chateau Cambrefis, 331.

- Montpelier, a fruitless conference held there for the reflicution of the kingdom of Navarre, II. 67.
- Moronè, Jerome, chancellor of Milan, his character, II. 202. Retires from the French exactions in Milan to Francis Sforza, 203. His intrigues, how rendered abortive, ib. Quiets the mutiny of the Imperial troops in Milan, II. 289. Is difgufted with the behaviour of Charles, 342. Intrigues againft the Emperor with Pefcara, 344. Is betrayed to the Emperor by Pefcara, 346. Is arrefted at his vifit to Pefcara, 348. Is fet at liberty by the Duke of Bourbon, and becomes his confident, 392. Moufon in France, taken by the Imperialifts, II. 196. Retaken by Francis, 197.
- Mulhaujen, battle of, between the Emperor Charles V. and the Elector of Saxony, III. 437.
- Muley Hascen, King of Tunis, his inhuman treatment of his father and brothers, III. 101. Is expelled by Barbarossa, 103. Engages the Emperor Charles V. to reftore him, 105. Is established again by the surrender of Tunis, 112. His treaty with Charles, 113.

Muncer,

- Mancer, Thomas, a difciple of Luther, oppofes him with fanatical notions, II. 369. Heads the infurrection of the Peafants in Thuringia, 370. His extravagant fchemes, ib. Is defeated and put to death, 372.
- Munster, the first fettlement of the Anabaptists in that city, III. 79. The city feized by them, 80. They establish a new form of government there, ib. Is called Mount Sion, 81. The Bishop of, repulsed by them, 82. Is blockaded by the bishop, 87. The city taken, 89. See Anabaptists.
- Murder, the prices of composition for, by the Romish clergy, II. 153.
- Mustapha, the declared heir to Sultan Solyman the Magnificent, is invested with the administration of Diarbequir, IV. 146. His father rendered jealous of his popularity, by the arts of Roxalana, 147. Is strangled by his father's order, 151. His only fon murdered, 153.

N

- Naples, the revenues of, mortgaged by Lannoy to fupply the Emperor in his exigencies, II. 315. Invaded by the French under the Duke of Albany, 320. Invaded by Pope Clement VII. 394. Treaty between the Pope and Lannoy viceroy of, 398. The Prince of Orange retreats thither before Lautree, III. 17. Is blockaded by Lautree, 18. Sea engagement in the harbour of, between Andrew Doria and Moncada, ib. Caufes which difappointed the French operations against, 19. Doria revolts, and opens the communication by fea again, 22, 23. Oppressed by the Spanish viceroy Don Pedro de Toledo, becomes difaffected to the Emperor Charles V. IV. 127. Is haraffed by a Turkish fleet, 128. Naffau, Count of, invades Bouillon at the head of the
- Imperialists, II. 196. Invades France, takes Moufon, and belieges Mezieres, but is repulsed, ib. Navarre, the kingdom of, unjustly acquired by Ferdi
  - nand of Aragon, II. 26. D'Albert's invalion of, Vol. IV. F f defeated defeated by Cardinal Ximenes, 51. Its caffles difmantled, except Pampeluna, which Ximenes ftrengthens, ib. Invaded by Francis I. in the name of Henry D'Albert, 192. Reduced by L'Efparre, the French general, 193. The French driven out by the Spaniards, and L'Efparre taken prifoner, 194.

- Netherlands, the government of, first affumed by Charles V. II. 32. The Flemings averfe to Charles's going to Spain, 56. Invaded by Francis I. King of France, 197. A truce concluded with, by Henry VIII. of England, III. 20. Invaded by Francis again, 154. A fulpenfion of arms there, 155. An infurrection at Ghent, 186. See Ghent. Is once more invaded by Francis, 268. Refigned by the Emperor to his fon Philip, IV. 230. A review of the alterations in, during the fixteenth century, IV. 369, 370.
- Nice, a truce for ten years concluded there between the Emperor and Francis, III. 162. Befieged by the French and Turks, 273.
- Noyen, treaty of, between Charles V. and Francis I. of France, 11. 55. The terms of, neglected by Charles, 98.
- Nuremburgh, the city of, embraces the reformed religion, II. 295. Diet of, particulars of Pope Adrian's brief to, refpecting the reformers, 296. The reply to, 298. Propofes a general council, ib. Prefents a lift of grievances to the Pope, 299. The recefs, or edict, of, 300. This diet of great advantage to the reformers, 301. Proceedings of a fecond diet there, 304. Recefs of the diet, 305. An accommodation agreed to there, between the Emperor Charles V. and the Protestants, III. 61.

Oran, and other places in Barbary annexed to the crown of Caffile, by Ximenes, II. 25.

Orange, Phillibert de Chalons, Prince of, general of the Imperial army on the death of the Duke of Bourbon, Bourbon, takes the caffle of St. Angelo, and Pope Clement VII. prifoner, II. 407. Retires to Naples on the approach of Lautrec, III. 17. Takes his fuccefior the marquis de Saluces, prifoner at Avería, 24.

Orleans, Duke of, delivered up to the Emperor Charles V. with the Dauphin, as hoftages for the performance of the treaty of Madrid, 11. 362. Is married to Catharine di Medici, III. 71. Becomes Dauphin by the death of his brother, 152. See Dauphin.

Duke of, brother to the former, commands the army appointed by Francis I. for the invation of Luxembourgh, III. 258. Is prompted by envy to abandon his conquests, and join his brother the Dauphin in Roufillon, 259. Dies, 319.

P

Pacheco, Donna Maria, wife to Don John de Padillo, her artful scheme to raife money to supply the army of the holy junta, II. 249. Her husband taken prisoner and executed, 256. His letter to her, 257. Raifes forces to revenge his death, 260. Is reduced and retires to Portugal, 261.

Padilla, Don John de, his family and character, II. 224. Heads the infurrection at Toledo, ib. Routs the troops under Ronguillo, 227. Calls a convention of the malecontents at Avila, 232. Forms the confederacy called the Holy Junta, ib. Difclaims Adrian's authority, ib. Gets possession of Queen Joanna, 233. Removes the Holy Junta to Tordefillas, the place of her refidence, 234. Sent with troops to Valladolid, and deprives Adrian of all power of government, 235. Is fuperfeded in the command of the army of the Junta, by Don Pedro de Giron, 245. Is appointed commander at the refignation of Giron, 2.48. His army supplied with money by an expedient of his wife, 249. Besieges Torrelobaton, 253. Takes and plunders it, ib. Concludes a truce with the nobles, ib. Is wounded and taken Ff 2 priloner prisoner in an action with the Conde de Haro, 255. Is put to death, 256. His letter to his wife, ib. His letter to the city of Toledo, ib.

- Palatinate, the Reformation established there by the Elector Frederick, III. 323.
- Palatine, Count, ambaffador from the diet at Frankfort, brings Charles V. the offer of the Imperial crown, which he accepts, 11. 88.
- Pampeluna, caftle of, in Navarre, its fortifications ftrengthened by Cardinal Ximenes, II. 51. Taken by L'Efparre, the French general for Henry D'Albret, 193. Retaken by the French, 194.
- Papacy, how liable to be affected by the disposal of the Imperial crown, II. 78.
- Paraguay, a fovereignty established there, by the order of Jesuits, III. 219. The inhabitants of, civilized by them, 220. Precautions used by the Jesuits to preferve the independency of their empire there, 221.
- Paris, a decree published by the university of, against Martin Luther the Reformer, II. 181. A decree of the parliament of, published against the Emperor Charles V. III. 153.
- Parma, the dutchy of, confirmed to Octavio Farmefe, by Pope Julius III. IV. 32. Is attacked by the Imperialifts, and fuccessfully protected by the French, 35.
- Paffau, a treaty concluded there between the Emperor Charles V. and Maurice of Saxony, IV. 101. Reflections on this peace and the conduct of Maurice, 103.
- Pavia, besieged by Francis I. of France, II. 316. Vigoroufly defended by Antonio de Leyva, 318. Battle of, between Francis and the Duke of Bourbon, 324. The Imperial troops in that city mutiny, 336.
- Paul III. Pope, elected, III. 75. His character, ib.
  Propofes a general council to be held at Mantua, 94.
  Negociates perfonally between the Emperor and Francis, 160. Iffues a bull for a council at Mantua, 173. Prorogues and transfers it to Vicenza, 175.
  A partial reformation of abufes by, 176. Summons the the council of Trent, 278. Prorogues it, 279. Summons it again, 310. Grants the dutchies of Parma and Placentia to his illegitimate fon, 320. Deprives and excommunicates the electoral bifhop of Cologne, 343. Preffes the Emperor to declare against the Protestants, 345. Concludes an alliance with him against the Protestants, 352. Indifcreetly publishes this treaty, 356. His troops join the Emperor, 372. Recalls them, 399. Removes the council from Trent to Bologna, 469. Refuses the Emperor's request to carry the council back to Trent, 470. His refentment against the Emperor for the murder of his fon Cardinal Farnese, 473. Is petitioned by the diet of Augfburg for the return of the council to Trent, 475. Eludes the complying with his requeft, 477. His fentiments of the Interim, published by Charles, 487. Dismisses the council of Bologna, 494. Annexes Parma and Placentia to the Holy See, IV. 2. Dies 3. The manner of his death inquired into, 4.

Paul IV. Pope, elected, IV. 209. His character and history, 210. Founds the order of Theatines, 211. Is the principal occasion of establishing the inquisition in the Papal territories, 212. Lays alide his aufterity on his election, ib. His partiality to his nephews, 213. Is alienated from the Emperor by his nephews, 216. Makes overtures to an alliance with France, 217. Is enraged by the recess of the diet of Augsburg, 220. Signs a treaty with France, 223. Is included in the truce for five years, concluded between the Emperor and Henry, 239. His infidious artifices to defeat this truce, 242. Abfolves Henry from his oath, and concludes a new treaty with him, 246. His violent proceedings against Philip, now King of Spain, 247. The Campagna Romana feized by the Duke d'Alva, 250. Concludes a truce with Alva, 251. Contraft between his conduct and that of Charles, 260. Renews his hoftilities against Philip, 262, Is unprovided for military operations, 263. Is reduced to make reace with Philip, by the recal of the Duke of of Guile after the defeat of St. Quintin, 283. Receives an ambaffador from the Emperor Ferdinand to notify his election, but refules to fee him or to acknowledge the Emperor, 297. Dies, 335.

- Paulin, a French officer, fent ambaffador from Francis I. to Sultan Solyman, III. 267. His fuccefsful negociations at the Porte, ib.
- Pembroke, earl of, fent by Queen Mary of England with a body of men to join the Spanith army in the Low-Countries, IV. 269.
- Perpignan, the capital of Roufillon, befieged by the Dauphin of France, III. 258. The fiege raifed, 259.
- Pefcara, marquis de, takes Milan by affault, II. 208. Drives Bonnivet back to France, 290. His generous care of the chevalier Bayard, 291. Commands in the invalion of Provence, 309. Befieges Marfeilles, 310. His army retires toward Italy, on the appearance of the French troops; ib. Refigns Milan to the French, 314. Prevails on the Spanish troops not to murmur at prefent for their pay, 316. Contributes to the defeat of Francis at the battle of Pavia, 325. Is difgusted at Francis being taken to Spain, without his concurrence, 343. His refentment inflamed by Moronè, 344. Betrays Moronè's defigns to the Emperor, 347. Arrefts Moronè, 348. Dies, 353.
- Philip, Archduke of Auftria, and father of Charles V. vifits Spain, with his wife Joanna, II. 4. Does homage by the way to Lewis XII. of France for the earldom of Flanders, ib. His title to the crown acknowledged by the Cortes, ib. Is difgufted with the formality of the Spanish court, ib. Ferdinand becomes jealous of his power, ib. Slights his wife, 5. His abrupt departure from Spain, ib. Paffes through France, and enters into a treaty with Lewis, 6. His fentiments on Ferdinand's obtaining the regency of Caftile, 10. Requires Ferdinand to retire to Aragon, and refign his regency of Caftile, 11. The Regency of Caftile, vefted jointly in him, Ferdinand, and Joanna, by the treaty of Salamancha, 15. Sets out out for Spain, and is driven on the coaft of England, where he is detained three months by Henry VII. 16. Arrives at Corunna, ib. The Caftilian nobility declare openly for him, ib. Ferdinand refigns the regency of Caftile to him, 17. Interview between them, ib. Acknowledged King of Caftile by the Cortes, 19. Dies, ib. Joanna's extraordinary conduct in regard to his body, 20. See Joanna.

Philip, Prince, fon to the Emperor Charles V. his right of fucceffion recognized by the Cortes of Aragon and Valencia, III. 261. Is acknowledged by the States of the Netherlands, 407. His deportment disgusts the Flemings, ib. His character, IV. 30. Is married to Mary Queen of England, 157, 160. The English parliament jealous of him, 163. His father refigns his hereditary dominions to him, 223. Is called by his father out of England, 230. The ceremony of investing him, ib. His father's address to him, 233. Commissions Cardinal Granvelle to address the affembly in his name, 234. Mary Queen Dowager of Hungary refigns her regency, 235. The dominions of Spain refigned to him, ib. His unpolitenefs to the French amballador Coligni, 240, Note. The Pope's violent proceedings against him, 247. His scruples concerning commencing hostilities against the Pope, 248. His ungrateful neglect in paying his father's penfion, 258. The Pope renews hostilities against him, 262. Affembles an army in the Low-Countries against France, 267. Goes over to England to engage that kingdom in the war, ib. Visits the camp at St. Quintin, after the victory, 276. Opp fes the fcheme of penetrating to Paris, and orders the fiege of St. Quintin to be profecuted, 278. St. Quintin taken by affault, 279. The small advantages he reaped by these successes, 281. Builds the Escurial in memory of the battle of St. Quintin, 1b. Concludes a peace with the Pope, 283. Reftores Placentia to Octavio Farnese, 285. Grants the investiture of Siena to Colmo di Medici, 288. Enters into Ff1 negociations negociations for peace with his prifoner Montmorency, 309. Death of Queen Mary, 322. Addreffes her fucceffor Elizabeth for marriage, 323. Elizabeth's motives for rejecting him, 325. Her evalue and wer to him, 326. Supplants his fon Don Carlos, and marries Henry's daughter Elizabeth, 331. Articles of the treaty of Chateau Cambrelis, 332.

Phillibert, Emanuel, Duke of Savoy. See Savoy.

- Phillipino, nephew to Andrew Doria, defeats Moncada in a fea engagement before the harbour of Naples, III. 18.
- Piadena, marquis de, invades Transylvania for Ferdinand IV. 52. Misrepresents Cardinal Martinuzzi to Ferdinand, and obtains a commission to assass him, 57. Is forced to abandon Transylvania, 141.
- Picardy, invaded by Henry VIII. II. 218. Henry forced by the Duke de Vendôme to retire, 219. Invaded again under the Duke of Suffolk, 286. Who penetrates almost to Paris, but is driven back, 287. Ineffectual invasion by the Imperialists, III. 150.
- Placentia, the dutchy of, granted together with that of Parma by Pope Paul III. to his natural fon, Cardinal Farnefe, III. 320. Farnefe affaffinated there, 472. Is taken poffeffion of by the Imperial troops, 473. Reftored to Octavio Farnefe, by Philip II. of Spain, IV. 285.
- Pole, Cardinal, arrives in England with a legantine commiffion, IV. 161. Endeavours to mediate a peace between the Emperor and the King of France, without fuccefs, 190. Is recalled from the court of England by Pope Paul IV. 262.
- Printing, its effects on the progress of the Reformation, II. 168.
- Prague, its privileges abridged by Ferdinand King of Bohemia, III. 465.
- Protefants, the derivation of the name, III. 48. Of whom they originally confifted, ib. A fevere decree published against them by the Emperor, 53. They enter into a league, 54. See Smalkalde. Renew their their league, and apply to Francis King of France, and Henry VIII. of England, for protection, 57. Are fecretly encouraged by Francis, 58. Receive a fupply of money from Henry, 59. Terms of the pacification agreed to between them and the Emperor at Nuremburg, 61. Affift the Emperor against the Turks, 62. Their negociations with the Pope, relative to a general council, 65. Renew the league of Smalkalde for ten years, 95. The motives for refusing to affift the king of France against the Emperor, 121. Refuse to acknowledge the council fummoned by the Pope at Mantua, 174. A conference between their principal divines and a deputation of Catholics, at Ratifbon, 227. This conference how rendered fruitless, 229. Obtain a private grant from Charles in their favour, 231. Drive the Duke of Brunswick from his dominions, 280. All rigorous edicts against them suspended by a recess of the diet of Spires, 285. Their remonstrances to Ferdinand at the diet of Worms, 313. Their in-flexible adherence to the receis of Spires, ib. Difclaim all connection with the council of Trent, 315. Are ftrengthened by the acceffion of Frederick Elector Palatine, 323. Are alarmed at the proceedings of the Emperor, 327, 351. The Emperor leagues with the Pope against them, 353. Prepare to refist the Emperor, 358. Levy an army, 363. The operations of the army diffracted by the joint commanders, The army dispersed, 391. The Elector of 371. Saxony reduced, 439. The Landgrave deceived by treaty, and confined, 455, 456. The Emperor's cruel treatment of him, 461. The Interim, a fyftem of theology recommended by the Emperor to the diet at Augsburg, 482. Are promised protection by the Emperor at the council of Trent, IV. 23. The Emperor proceeds rigoroully against them, 38. Their deputies obtain a fafe-conduct from the Emperor, but are refused by the council, 49. Maurice of Saxony raises an army in their cause, 70. See Maurice. Treaty of Paffau, 102. The protestant Princes again unite to firengthen the Protestant intereft, terest, 198. Recess of the diet of Augsburg on the subject of religion, 200. Why originally averse to the principles of toleration, 205.

Provence, is laid wafte by the Marefchal Montmorency on the approach of the Emperor Charles V. III. 143. Is entered by the Emperor, 144. The difaftrous retreat of the Emperor from, 148.

Pruffia, when conquered by the Teutonic order, II. 375. Is erected into a dutchy, and finally into a kingdom, and enjoyed by the house of Brandenburg, 376.

R

- Ratiflon, a conference between a deputation of Protestant and Catholic divines, before the Emperor and diet there, III. 226. This conference how rendered fruitles, 229. A diet opened there by the Emperor, 347. The Catholic members of, affert the authority of the council of Trent, 348. The Protestants present a memorial against it, 350. The Protestant deputies retire, 352.
- Reformation in religion, the rife of, explained, II. 113. The diet at Worms called by Charles V. to check the progress of, ib. Account of Martin Luther, the Reformer, 119. Beginning of in Switzerland by Zuinglius, 137. State of, in Germany, at the arrival of Charles V. 141. Reflection on the conduct of the court of Rome toward Luther, 142. And on Luther's conduct, 144. Inquiry into the caufes which contributed to the progrefs of, 147. Obfervations on the pontificate of Alexander VI. and Julius II. 149. The immoral lives of the Romish clergy, 150. The progress of, favoured by the invention of printing, 168. And the revival of learning, 169. The great progress of, in Germany, 295. Advantages derived to, from the diet at Nuremburgh, 301. Its tendency in favour of civil liberty, 368. The diffentions between the Emperor and the Pope, favourable to, 411. The great spread of, among the German Princes, III. 44. The confession confession of Augsburg drawn up by Melanchon, 51. Causes which led to that of England, 72. The excesses it gave rise to, 76. See Protestants, Maurice, and Smalkalde. Is established in Saxony, 180. The great alteration occasioned by, in the court of Rome, IV. 356. Contributed to improve both the morals and learning of the Romisch church, 361.

- Reggie, invefted by the French, who are repulfed by the governor Guicciardini the historian, II. 203.
- Remonstrance of grievances drawn up by the Holy Junta, the particulars of, II. 238. Remarks on, 242.

Reverfe, a deed to called, figned by the archduke Ferdinand on being elected King of Bohemia, II. 410.

- Rheggio, plundered and burnt by Barbarofia, III. 272. Rhodes, the ifland of, befieged by Solyman the Magnificent, II. 220. Taken by him, 222. The ifland of Malta granted to the knights of, by the Emperor Charles V. ib.
- Richlieu, Cardinal, his remarks on De Retz's hiftory of Fielco's confpiracy, III. 416. Note.
- Rincon, the French ambaffador at the Porte, the motives of his return to France, III. 252. Is murdered in his journey back to Conftantinople, by order of the Imperial governor of the Milanefe, 253.
- Rome, reflections on the conduct of the court of, refpecting the proceedings against Martin Luther, II. 143. The exorbitant wealth of the church of, previous to the Reformation, 154. Venality of, 165. How it drained other countries of their wealth, ib. The city feized by Cardinal Colonna, and Pope Clement VII. befieged in the castle of St. Angelo, 389. The city taken by the Imperialists, and Bourbon killed, ib. Is plundered, ib. The great revolution in the court of, during the fixteenth ceatury, III. 354. How affected by the Revolt of Luther, 355. The fpirit of its government changed by, 359.
- Ronquillo, fent by Cardinal Adrian with troops to supprefs the infurrection in Segovia, II. 227. Is routed by the infurgents, ib.

Rovere,

- Roverd, Francesco Maria de, reftored to his dutchy of Urbino by Pope Adrian, II. 270.
- Roxalana, a Ruffian captive, becomes the favourite miftrefs of Sultan Solyman the Magnificent, IV. 142. Her only daughter married to Ruftan the Grand Vizier, 143. Procures herfelf to be declared a free woman by the Sultan, 144. Is formally married to him, 145. Renders Solyman jealous of the virtues of his fon Muftapha, 146. Muftapha ftrangled, 151.
- Rustan, Grand Vizier to Solyman the Magnificent, is married to his daughter by Roxalana, IV. 143. Enters into Roxalana's fcheme to ruin Solyman's fon Mustapha, ib. Is fent with an army to destroy him, 149. Draws Solyman to the army by false reports, ib.

S

- Salamanca, treaty of, between Ferdinand of Aragon, and his fon-in-law Philip, II. 15.
- Salerna, Prince of, heads the difaffected Neapolitans, against the oppressions of the viceroy Don Pedro de Toledo, IV. 127. Solicits aid from Henry II. of France, who instigates the Turks to invade Naples, ib.
- Saluces, marquis de, fucceeds Lautrec in the command of the French army before Naples, III. 24. Retires to Averfa, where he is taken prifoner by the Prince of Orange, ib. Betrays his charge in Piedmont, 141.
- Sancerre, count de, defends St. Difiere, against the Emperor Charles, III. 294. Is deceived into a furrender by the Cardinal Granvelle, 297.
- Sauvage, a Fleming, made chancellor of Caftile by Charles, on the death of Ximenes, II. 64. His extortions, ib.
- Savona, is fortified, and its harbour cleared by the French, to favour its rivalship with Genoa, III. 21.

Savoy,

Savoy, Charles Duke of, marries Beatrix of Portugal, fifter to the Emperor Charles V. III. 123. The caufe of Francis's difpleafure againft him, ib. His territories over-run by the French troops, 124. Geneva recovers its liberty, 125. His fituation by the truce at Nice, between the Emperor and Francis, 163. Is befieged at Nice, by the French and Turks, III. 273.

Emanuel Phillibert Duke of, appointed by Philip of Spain to command his army in the Low-Countries, IV. 269. Invefts St. Quintin, 270. Defeats D'Andelot in an endeavour to join the garrifon, 273. But does not hinder him from entering the town, ib. Defeats the Conftable Montmorency, and takes him prifoner, 274. Is gracioufly vifited in the camp by Philip, 277. Takes St. Quintin by affault, 279. Affifts Montmorency in negociating peace between Philip and Henry, 310. Marries Henry's fifter Elizabeth, 331. 334.

Saxony, Elector of, appointed joint commander of the army of the Protestant league, with the Landgrave of Heffe, III. 371. Their characters compared, ib. Opposes the Landgrave's intention of giving battle to the Emperor, 376. His electorate feized by Maurice, 388. The army of the league disperse, 391. Recovers Saxony, 396. Is amused by Maurice with a negociation, 397. Raifes an army to defend himfelf against the Emperor, 432. Is irrefolute in his measures, 433. Charles passes the Elbe, 434. Is attacked by the Imperialists, 438. Is taken prifoner and harfhly received by the Emperor, 439. Is condemned to death by a court martial, 443. His refolution on the occafion, 445. Is induced by regard to his family to furrender his electorate, 447. Refuses the Emperor's defire of his approving the Interim, 488. The rigour of his confinement increased, Is carried by the Emperor with him into the 489. Netherlands, 494. Is releafed by the Emperor on Maurice's taking arms against him, but chooses to continue with the Emperor, IV. 82. Obtains his liberty after the treaty of Paffau, 109.

Saxony,

- Saxony, George Duke of, an enemy to the Reformation, 111. 179. His death an advantage to the Reformation, ib. The Protestant religion established by Henry Duke of, 180. Henry is fucceeded by his fon Maurice, 275. His motives for not acceding to the league of Smalkalde, ib. Marches to the affistance of Ferdinand in Hungary, 276. Joins the Emperor against the Protestants, 364, 383. See-Maurice.
- Schertel, Sebastian, a commander in the army of the Protestant league, his vigorous commencement of hostilities, III. 369. Is injudiciously recalled, 370. Is expelled from Augsburg on the dispersion of the Protestant army, 393.
- Scotland, James V. of, married to Mary of Guife, duchefs-dowager of Longueville, III. 171. Death of James and acceffion of his infant daughter Mary, 264. Mary contracted to the Dauphin of France, 474. The marriage celebrated, IV. 300. Mary affumes the title and arms of England on the death of Mary of England, 325. Included in the treaty of Chateau Cambrefis, 330. Alteration in the conduct of England toward, 353.
- Sects in religion, reflections on the origin of, III. 76.
  Segovia, an infurrection there, on account of their reprefentative Tordefillas voting for the donative to Charles V. III. 225. He is killed by the populace, ib. The infurgents there defeat Ronquillo, fent to fupprefs them by Cardinal Adrian, 227. Surrenders after the battle of Villalar, 258.
- Selim II. Sultan, extirpates the Mamalukes, and adds Egypt and Syria to his empire, II. 72. Confidered as formidable to the European powers, ib.
- Sforza, obtains of Charles V. the inveftiture of Milan, II. 343. Forfeits the dutchy, by his intrigues with Morone, 348. Joins in a league against Charles for the recovery of Milan, 379. Is forced to furrender Milan to the Imperialists, 386. Obtains again of the Emperor the investiture of Milan, III. 42. Enters into a private treaty with Francis, 116. Merveille veille Francis's envoy executed for murder, 117. Dies, 129.

- Siena, the inhabitants of, implore the affiftance of the Emperor Charles V. to defend them against their nobles, IV. 124. The Imperial troops endeavour to enflave them, ib. Regain possible for of their city, 126. Repulse an attack of the Germans, 140. Are besieged by the marquis de Marignano, 176. The commander Monluc repulses the affaults vigorously, 177. The town reduced by famine, 178. Numbers of the citizens retire, and establish a free government at Monte Alcino, 179. The remaining citizens oppressed, 180. And flock to Monte Alcino, ib. Is granted by the Emperor to his fon Philip, 181. The invessiture given by Philip to Cosmo di Medici, 288.
- Sieverhausen, battle of, between Maurice of Saxony and Albert of Brandenburg, IV. 132.
- Sion, Cardinal of, his fcheme for weakening the French army in the Milanefe, II. 207. Leaves the Imperial army to attend the conclave on the death of Leo X. 210.
- Smalkalde, the Protestants enter into a league there, for their mutual fupport, III. 54. The league renewed at a fecond meeting there, 57. The league of, renewed for ten years, 95. A manifesto, refuling to acknowledge a council called by the Pope, 174. The king of Denmark joins the league, 177. The Princes of, proteft against the authority of the Imperial chamber, and the recess of the diet at Nuremburg, 281. Publish a manifesto against the proceedings of the council at Trent, 327. Are alarmed at the proceedings of the Emperor, ib. A want of unity among the members, 329. The views of the Elector of Saxony, and the Landgrave, explained, ib. Appear at the diet of Ratifbon by deputies, 348. Their deputies proteft against the council of Trent, 350. Their deputies, alarmed at the Emperor's proceedings and declarations, leave the diet, 352. The Emperor leagues with the Pope against them, 353. Prepare to refift the Emperor, 358. Are ditappointed difappointed in their application to the Venetians and Swifs, 359. As alfo with Henry VIII. and Francis, 361. Affemble a large army, 363. Are put under the ban of the Empire, 367. Declare war againft the Emperor, 368. Hoffilities begun by Schertel, 369. They recal him, 370. The Elector of Saxony and Landgrave of Heffe appointed joint commanders of their army, 371. The characters of the two commanders compared, ib. Their operations diffracted by this joint command, 372. Cannonade the Emperor, 390. Their army difperfe, 391. The Elector of Saxony reduced, 439. The Landgrave deceived and confined, 455. Their warlike flores feized by the Emperor, 462. See Maurice.

Solyman the Magnificent, ascends the Ottoman throne, II. 112. Invades Hungary and takes Belgrade, 220. Takes the island of Rhodes, ib. Defeats the Hungarians at Mohacz, 409. His fucceffes, and the number of prifoners he carried away, 410. Befieges Vienna, III. 41. Enters Hungary again with a vaft army, but is forced to retire by the Emperor Charles, Takes Barbaroffa the pirate under his pro-62. tection, 100. Concludes an alliance with Francis King of France, 158. Prepares to invade Naples, ib. Protects Stephen King of Hungary, and defeats Ferdinand, 235. Seizes Hungary for himfelf, 236. Over-runs Hungary again, in fulfilment of his treaty with Francis, 272. Concludes a truce with the Emperor, 346. Lofes Transylvania, IV. 55. Ravages the coafts of Italy, 95, 128. Carries a mighty Re-establishes Ifabella army into Hungary, 97. and her fon in Transylvania, 141. His violent attachment to his concubine Roxalana, 142. Is prevailed on to declare her a free woman, 144. Formally marries her, 145. Is rendered jealous of the virtues of his fon Mustapha, by the arts of Roxalana, 147. Orders him to be strangled, 151. Orders the murder of Mustapha's fon, 155.

Spain,

Stain, the flate of, at the death of Ferdinand of Aragon, II. 33. Charles king of, afpires to the Imperial crown on the death of Maximilian, 70. Is elected Emperor, 85. Reflections of the Spaniards on that event, 88. Charles appoints viceroys, and departs for Germany, 95. Infurrections there, 224. A view of the feudal system in, 230. An account of the confederacy, termed the Holy Junta, 232. Caufes which prevented an union of the malcontents in the respective provinces, 267. The moderation of Charles toward them on his arrival, 268. Inftance of the haughty spirit of the grandees, III. 185. Is invaded by the Dauphin, 258. The dominions of, refigned by Charles to his fon Philip IV. 235. The arrival of Charles, and his reception there, 257. The place of his retreat defcribed, 259. The regal power in, how enlarged by Charles, 340. The foreign acquifitions added to, 341. See Aragon, Castile, Galicia, Valencia, Cortes, Germanada, and Holy Junta.

- Spires, diet of, its proceedings relative to the Reformation, II. 412. Another diet called there by the Emperor, III. 46. Another diet at, 281. Receis of, in favour of the Protestants, 285.
- Spiritual centures of the Romifh church, the dreadful effects of, II. 159.
- St. Differ, in Champagne, invefted by the Emperor, III. 294. Is obtained by the artifice of Cardinal Granvelle, 297.
- St. Juflus, monastery of, in Plazencia, is chosen by the Emperor Charles V. for his retreat after his refignation, IV. 259. His fituation described, ib. His apartments, ib.
- St. Quintin, invefted by the Spanish troops, and defended by admiral Coligni, IV. 270. D'Andelot defeated in an endeavour to join the garrison, 272. But enters the town, 273. Montmorency defeated by the duke of Savoy, ib. The town taken by affault, 279.
- Strozzi, Peter, fome account of, IV. 173. Is intrufted with the command of the French army in Italy. Vol. IV. Gg ib.

ib. Is defeated by the marquis de Marignano, 176.

- Suabia, an infurrection of the peafants against the nobles there, II. 366. They publish a memorial of their grievances, ib. The infurgents dispersed, 367. The Protestant religion suppressed there by the Emperor Charles V. IV. 39.
- Suffelk, duke of, invades Picardy, penetrates almost to Paris, but is driven back, II. 287.
- Surrey, earl of, created high admiral to the Emperor Charles V. II. 218. Obliged to retire out of Picardy by the Duke de Vendome, 219.
- Sweden, a fummary view of the revolutions in, during the fixteenth century, IV. 370, 371.
- Switzerland, the Cantons of, espouse the pretensions of Charles V. to the Imperial crown, II. 76. Commencement of the Reformation there by Zuinglius, 137. The regulation under which they hire out their troops, 207. The precipitate battle, infifted on by their troops under Lautrec, lost, 214.
- Syria, how and by whom added to the Ottoman Empire, II. 72.
  - T
- Termes, marefchal de, governor of Calais, takes Dunkirk by florm, IV. 302. Engages the count of Egmont, and is defeated by the accidental arrival of an Englifh fquadron on the coaft, 303. Is taken prifoner, 304.
- Terrouane, taken and demolifhed by the Emperor Charles V. IV. 138.
- Tetzel, a Dominican friar, his fhameful conduct in the fale of Indulgences in Germany, II. 116. His form of abfolution, and recommendation of the virtues of Indulgences, ib. Note. His debauched courfe of life, 119. Publishes these against Luther, 124.
- Teutonic order, a character of, 11. 374. Conquer the province of Prussia, 375. Their grand master Albert made duke of Piussia, 376.

Theatines, the order of, by whom founded, IV. 211. Thionville,

- Thionville, in Luxembourg, taken by the Duke of Guife, IV. 302.
- Thuringia, an infurrection of the peafants there, against the nobility, II. 368. The fanatical notions inspired into them by Thomas Muncer, 370. Their diforderly army defeated, 372.
- Toledo, infurrection in, at the departure of Charles V. for Germany, 96. 224. The cathedral of, ftripped of its riches to support the army of the Holy Junta, 249. Padillo's letter to, at his execution, 256. Is inftigated to continue in arms by Padillo's wife, 259. Is reduced, 261.
- Toledo, Ludovico de, nephew to Cofmo di Medici, fent by his uncle to negociate with Philip II. of Spain, for the inveftiture of Siena, IV. 287.
- Toledo, Don Pedro de, viceroy of Naples, oppresses the Neapolitans, IV. 127. And occasions the Turks to ravage the coasts of Naples, ib.
- Toleration, reflections on the progress of, in Germany, IV. 201. Why mutually allowed among the ancient Heathens, 202. How the primitive Christians became averse to, ib.
- Tomorri, Paul, a Franciscan monk, archbishop of Golocza, is made general of the Hungarian army against Solyman the Magnificent, and is defeated by him, II. 409.
- Tordefillas, the refidence of Queen Joanna, the confederacy of malcontents called the Holy Junta, removed thither, II. 234. The Queen taken there by the Conde de Haro, 247.

one of the representatives of Segovia, killed by the populace for voting the donative to Charles V. at the Cortes affembled in Galicia, II. 226.

- Tranfylvania, is furrendered to Ferdinand King of the Romans, by Queen Ifabella, IV. 55.
- Tremouille, La, drives the English under the duke of Suffolk out of Picardy, II. 287.

Trent, the council of, fummoned, III. 278. Prorogued, 279. Again fummoned, 310. Is opened, 324. Declares the apocryphal feriptures canonical, 342. Eftablifhes the authority of the church traditions, ib. The council,

council, on rumours of an infection in the city, is tranflated to Bologna, 469. Henry II. of France protefts against the council, IV. 36. The council breaks up on the approach of Maurice of Saxony, 82. Historical remarks on this council, 83. Characters of its historians, 85.

- Trent, Cardinal of, fent by the Emperor Charles V. to conclude an alliance with the Pope, III. 351. The nature of this treaty, 352.
- Tunis, the means of its coming under the power of Barbaroffa, traced, III. 101. The Emperor and other Chriftian powers unite to expel Barbaroffa, and reftore Muley Hascen, 105. Is taken by the Emperor, 111. Muley Hascen restored, and his treaty with Charles, 112.
- Tufcany, a review of the flate of, during the fixteenth century, IV. 367.

V

Valencia, an infurrection in, II. 90. The people there greatly opprefied by the nobles, ib. The nobles retufe to affemble the Cortes except the King is prefent, 91. Charles authorifes the people to continue in arms, ib. They expel the nobles, 92. Affociate under the Germanada, and appoint their own magifitrates, ib. Don Diego de Mendora, Conde de Melito, appointed regent, on the departure of Charles for Germany, 95. The Germanada refufe to lay down their arms, 263. Defeat the nobles in feveral actions, 265. Are at length routed by the Conde de Melito, ib. The moderation of Charles toward the infurgents on his arrival, 268.

Valentinois, Duchefs of. See Diana of Poitiers.

Valladdid, the first public entry of Charles V. to that city, II. 62. The inhabitants rife, burn Fonseca's house, and fortify the town, II. 229. Surrenders after the battle of Villalar, and dissolution of the Holy Junta, 258.

Vaucelles, treaty of, between Charles V. and Henry II. of France, IV. 238.

Vendome,

- Vendome, duke of, his plan of operations in oppoling the progress of the invasion of Picardy by Henry VIII. II. 219. Obliges him to retire, ib.
- Venice, the republic of, incline in favour of the pretenfions of Francis I. of France, to the Imperial crown, II. 76. Their views and apprehensions on the approaching rupture between the Emperor Charles V. and Francis, 101. Leagues with the Emperor against Francis, 272. A final accommodation between, and the Emperor, III. 42. Refuses to enter into the league of the Italian flates, formed by the Emperor, 67. A review of the state of that republic during the fixteenth century, IV. 365.
- Verrina, the confident of the Count of Lavagno, encourages him in his fcheme of overturning the government of Genoa, III. 404. Is protected by Francis on the ruin of that confpiracy, 424.
- Vielleville, the French governor of Metz, detects Father Leonard's conspiracy to betray the city to the Imperialists, IV. 187. Executes the conspirators, 189.
- Vienna, is befieged by Sultan Solyman the Magnificent, III. 41.
- Villalar, battle of, between Padilla and the Conde de Haro, II. 254.
- Villena, marquis de, his spirited reply to the request of the Emperor to lodge Bourbon in his palace, 11. 252.

Ulm, the government of that city violently altered, and its reformed ministers carried away in chains, by the Emperor Charles V. III. 492.

United Provinces of the Netherlands, a brief view of their revolt against the dominion of Spain, IV. 369.

Urbino, reftored by Pope Adrian to Francesco Maria de Roverè, II. 270.

W

Wallop, Sir John, joins the Emperor Charles V. at the fiege of Landrecy, with a body of English troops, III. 271. War,

5

- War, the method of carrying on in Europe, how improved at this period from the practice of earlier ages, II. 285. General reflections on the vicifitudes of, IV. 336.
- Wartburg, Martin Luther concealed there by the Elector of Saxony, II. 180.
- Wentworth, Lord, governor of Calais, remonstrates in vain with the English privy-council to provide for its fecurity, IV. 292. Is attacked by the Duke of Guise, and forced to capitulate, 294.
- Wittemberg, invefted by the Emperor Charles V. and defended by Sybilla of Cleves, wife to the Elector of Saxony, III. 441.
- Wolfey, Cardinal, his rife, character, and influence over Henry VIII. of England, 11. 104. Receives a penfioh from Francis I. of France, 106. And from the Emperor Charles V. ib. Detached from the French interest by the latter, 108. Inclines Henry to join the Emperor against Francis, 185. Sent by Henry to Calais, to negociate an accommodation between the Emperor and Francis, 197. Has an interview with Charles at Bruges, and concludes a league with him on the part of Henry, against France, 199. Meditates revenge against Charles on his fecond difappointment of the Papacy by the election of Clement VII. 284. Obtains of Clement a legantine commission in England for life, Negociates a league with Francis against the ib. Emperor, III. 3.
- Worms, a diet called there by Charles V. to check the progrefs of the Reformers, II. 113. Proceedings of, 176. Martin Luther cited before it, 177. Refufes to retract his opinions, 178. An edict publisthed against him, 179. Diet at, opened, III. 311.
- Wartemburg, Ulric Duke of, why expelled his dominions, 111. 91. Recovers his dominions by the affiftance of Francis King of France, and receives the Proteflant religion, 92.

Wyat,

Wyat, Sir Thomas, raifes an infurrection in Kenr against Queen Mary of England, on account of the Spanish match, 1V. 159. Is subdued and punished, 160.

Х

Ximenes, archbishop of Toledo, adheres to Ferdinand of Aragon, in his difpute with the archduke Philip concerning the regency of Castile, II. 12. Espouses Ferdinand's claim to the regency of Castile on Philip's death, 24. Conquers Oran, and other places in Barbary, for the crown of Castile, 25. Appointed regent of Caftile, by Ferdinand's will, until the arrival of Charles .V. in Spain, 35. His rife and character, ib. Admits the claim to the regency of Cardinal Adrian, fent with that commission by Charles, and executes it jointly with him, 38. Takes the infant Don Ferdinand to Madrid under his own eye, 39. Procures Charles, who affumed the regal title, to be acknowledged by the Christian nobility, 41. Schemes to extend the regal prerogative, 42. Depresses the nobility, 43. Frees the King from the feudal limitations, and eftablishes a regal army to check the Barons, 44. Suppresses a mutiny headed by the grandees, 45. Refumes the grants of Ferdinand to his nobles, 46. His prudent application of the revenue, 47. His bold affertion of his authority to the difcontented nobles, 48. Other affociates in the regency appointed at the infligation of the Flemish courtiers, 49. Retains the superior management, 50. Defeats John D'Albert's invafion of Navarre, ib. Difmantles all the castles there, except Pampeluna, which he strengthens, 51. The troops fent by him against Barbaroffa deteated, and his equanimity on that occasion, 52. Alarmed at the corruption of the Flemish court, he persuades Charles to visit Spain, 53. Falls fick on his journey to meet Charles at his arrival, 59. His letter of council to Charles, ib. Requefts an interview, 60. The ingratitude of Charles to him, ib. His death, 61. His character, 3 racter, ib. Reverence paid to his memory by the Spaniards, ib.

Zamora, bishop of, raises a regiment of priests to defend Tordefillas, for the Holy Junta, which is forced by the Conde de Haro, II. 247.

Zuinglius, attacks the fale of Indulgences at Zurich in Switzerland, II. 137.

FINIS.

